AYDEN ITEMS.

Newsp Notes From a Hustling Town Briefly Told

Ayden, N. C., June 11.

Capt. D. G. Berry brought us a sheaf of genuine Scotch oats measuring 5 feet 9 3/4 inches high. The seed were imported direct from Scotland by D. Gibb, his native home, and sown on March 13th. Mr. Berry has three acres of them, and they are of a very superior quality, large and heavy. The field presents a picturesque scene and when the gentle breeze floats over them they wave too and fro and reminds us of the billowy ocean waves. He expects to thresh 100 bushels per acre. Ayden is surely the garden spot of Pitt. These oats are growing within the incorporation. Mr. Berry is a judge of agriculture, as well as forestry.

Mrs. Zacariah McGlohon died at her home, near Ayden, Friday morning. She had an attack of measles and suffered a relapse from which she never recovered. Her infant followed her within a few hours. They will both be buried today near Farmville, in the same coffin. We extend sympathy to the bereaved family.

W. J. Boyd has withdrawn from Armour & Co. and gone in with W. A. Forber & Co., of Richmond. We now may expect the latter firm to rise above their competitors.

Protect your house against the filthy flies, and mosquitoes by putting in a set of the improved screen windows and doors, made by J. R. Smith Mfg. Co.

It has been suggested to have a reunion in August of all the descendants of the late Henry Smith, who married Celia Tucker long before the civil war. They raised seven sons and four daughters. Their children, grand children, great-grand children and great-great-grand children would number like Abraham's promise. They lived and raised their large family near where Jesse Braxton now lives, on the road leading from the Sam Kittrell place to Reedy Branch. The reunion will likely take place at Henry B. Smith's, who resides near the old home-stead, as he is the baby boy, and will gladly pay $25 towards a dinner. Their descendants are scattered from Eastern North Carolina to Western California. Ample time will be given for all to come home. A sumptuous dinner, a history or biographic sketch of each will be read, fitting ceremonies and a speech from Andrew Joyner, will be had on the memorable occasion.

We believe family reunions will add to the happiness and comfort of the older ones, who are passing away, and it keeps others in touch with their posterity. We hope to see these plans materialize during the coming August.

Getting Ready for Picnic.

All the members of the Christian Sunday school are earnestly requested to be present Sunday morning at 9:30, business of importance to be attended to. We are planning for the best picnic in the history of the school. All the teachers at the E. C. T. T. S. are cordially invited to all our services.

J. G. Latham, Supt.

Our Greenville, yours if you come.

Third Judicial District Convention.

The Democratic executive committee of the third judicial district of North Carolina met in New Bern yesterday and called the district convention to meet in Morehead, Saturday, July 9, at 2 p. m. Mr. D. C. Moore of Greenville, as a member of the executive committee, was present at the meeting.

Flour and Corn Mill

Mr. Farmer: I have as complete arranged flour and corn mill as twenty years experience in the business would assist me in building. I bought the very latest improved and the very best machinery to be had. I am making as fine flour as any mill in America that makes a pure straight flour. If you have any wheat that you want turned into flour, I will be pleased to serve you. Yours truly,
Jonathan Havens,

WINTERVILLE ITEMS.

Newsp Notes From Our Hustling Neighbor.

Winterville, N. C. June 11, 1910. O. W. Rollins went to Ayden Wednesday.

H. J. Langston, H. B. McLawhorn and F. A. Edmundson went to Greenville yesterday.

Miss Annie Bell, a well trained nurse of Washington, came in a few days ago to take charge of the little son of Abram Cox, who has typhoid fever.

M. B. Bryan went to Greenville Thursday.

Wanted—At once seven tons of beeswax at 25 cents per pound. M. G. Bryan,
6 17 Winterville, N. C.

J. L. Jackson, of Greenville, came in last night to see his brother, who has been sick for several days.

Miss Pearl Nelson, of Grifton, is visiting Miss Pattie Nelson.

F. A. Edmundson spent Friday in Greenville.

To Build Storage Warehouse.

It is persistently rumored that the American Tobacco Company is about to erect a large storage warehouse on the Higgs property on the western side of the A. C. L. railway. Nothing definite has been given out as yet by the company's representatives in Greenville, but they have failed to deny the truth or the report.

The title to this property has been investigated and the search brought out an interesting point in the history of deed recording in this part of the state. At one time no record had been made of any transfer of the property. A search among the old papers in the safe of the late Mr. Wm. B. Brown disclosed the deed, which had been made at the time.

The fact that this deed given in good faith and never contested had never been recorded made known the custom of not recording deeds in the years soon after the Civil War.

Mr. O. C. Gregory, head representative of the American Tobacco Company in Greenville, is out of town today. It is hoped that after his return full particulars of the large building can be given.

Greenville Needs One Like This.

"Every dog has his day," but those in Raleigh have had theirs already, according to an ordinance passed by the board of aldermen in adjourned session last night.

The ordinance provides that all dogs, license or unlicensed, running at large, or found anywhere in the city of Raleigh unless muzzled or held in leash or on the premises of the owner, shall be taken up by the police or any person authorized by the chief and impounded in the city pound. The owners of such dogs, whenever known, shall be notified, and the dogs shall be kept in the city pound for two days. If the owner does not redeem by paying the tax, if the dog is unlicensed, and the costs of keeping the dog and a fee of fifty cents, whether it is licensed or not, then the dog, after being kept in the city pound for two days, shall be killed with as little suffering as possible.—Raleigh News and Observer.

STATE NEWS.

Newsp Items of Interest Condensed for Busy Readers.

Fayetteville, June 10.—During a thunder storm here about 7:30 o'clock this evening, the Holt-Morgan cotton mill was struck by lightning and set on fire. James Garven, an operative, was found near the entrance and is supposed to have been killed by the same bolt. The fire was extinguished without great damage.

Pittsboro, June 10.—On last Sunday lightning struck a barn belonging to Ben Dorsett, an industrious colored farmer of Hickory Mount township, and killed two valuable mules and two hogs.

Washington, D. C., June 10.—Nothing daunted by his three previous marriages, Brodie L. Duke, a member of the North Carolina family of that name, with extensive tobacco interests, walked boldly to the marriage license bureau today and obtained a license to marry Miss Wylarda Rochelle, Duke gave his residence as Durham, N. C.

Wadesboro, June 10.—Telephonic advices from the southern part of the county tell of the drowning this morning of the daughter of the late Peter Moore. Particulars could not be secured, but it appears that the girl was seventeen years old and was attempting to cross Thompson's creek, which was running swiftly and fell, when she was drowned. Her companion, another girl, was rescued.

The city of New Bern is making extensive preparations for its Home-Coming Week, July 25-29 next, at which time will be celebrated the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the founding of New Bern by Christopher de Graffenried in 1710, and will be held the annual convention of the State Firemen's Association. Mr. R. D. W. Connor, secretary of the State Historical Commission, who will have charge of the historical features of the occasion, has just returned from New Bern, where he has been in conference with the officials of the celebration, and with the members of the Woman's Club and other citizens. Mr. Connor says that the people of New Bern are greatly interested in this celebration, and will make it an occasion of general interest to the people of the State.

The celebration will be opened on Monday, July 25, at noon, with an address by Dr. Julius Goebel, of Illinois, who will represent the German-American Alliance of the United States. Dr. Goebel is professor of history in the University of Illinois, and his address will probably be of an historical nature.—News and Observer.

New Telephone Directory Out.

We are now delivering our new telephone directory, and we earnestly ask that all users of the telephone will call by number instead of name, as it very greatly expedites the service. It is not for our own good, but the subscribers that we ask this. Owing to our rapid growth it is impossible for the operator to remember all the numbers and have to look them up, thereby greatly reducing the efficiency of the service. In calling by number always call the figures singly, as 17 call, "one" "seven," or as 280-L, call, "two" "eight" "0" "L. Try this and you will like it. Respectfully,
Home Telephone & Telegraph Co.

The Library.

The opening of a free public library is a most important event in the history of any town. A college training is an excellent thing; but, after all, the better part of every man's education is that which he gives himself, and it is for this that a good library should furnish the opportunity and the means.—James Russell Lowell.

European Tattoos.

Tattooing is not by any means confined to savage peoples. There are races in Europe which make it a regular practice, and men, women and children bear on their bodies ornamentations that are as ornate and queer, although not as extensive, as are markings on the bodies of the south sea savages. These European tattooers are among the Albanians and Bosnians, who live in the famous Balkan

LET THE PEOPLE CONTROL.

Following is a good suggestion, an extract from a letter to Collier's Weekly from Senator R. L. Owen, of Oklahoma:

"Permit me to register with you my cordial approval of Mark Sullivan's suggestion of how to have an Insurgent Congress by questioning candidates. Instead of private individuals questioning candidates on Cannonism, however, it would be more effective to have organized groups of citizens, who wish better party government, in clubs, in leagues, through farmers' unions, through labor unions, etc., question candidates not only on Cannonism, but on the initial and referendum, which is the open door to the overthrow of machine politics.

"The precinct boss, under the present convention system, by packed precinct meeting, held on short notice, at inconvenient places, elects the precinct delegate to county conventions. The county convention, composed of boss-chosen delegates, elects machine men to the congressional and State conventions. Thus the congressional convention and State convention has its members composed of the delegates (State or congressional) chosen by the delegates (county) delegated by the precinct delegates of a machine boss, who are not chosen by the electors of the precinct.

"Such a convention of delegated delegates of the third degree from the people is an agency by which selfish interests, either political or commercial, nominate candidates favorable to such interests, and when such candidates are elected by large secret campaign contributions, Cannonism and Aldrichism follow inevitably.

"You cannot control the trusts by the government when the government is controlled by the trusts.

"Question candidates in this fashion:

"Sir—If nominated and elected will you stand for (1) the mandatory direct primary, (2) a thorough-going corrupt practices act, and (3) the initiative and referendum? Please answer directly—yes or no. Your failure to so answer in two weeks will be understood to be a refusal. Yours very truly,

"Chairman Legislative Committee of—Club, or League, etc."

"By this policy popular control of the party government can be regained and Cannonism is a lost art."

Politics today is almost entirely controlled by interests and the common people or the masses have very little choice in the matter of the selection of candidates, for if one attends his precinct meetings at all he finds things most invariably cut and dried to suit the taste of the interests or bosses, consequently a great many voters never attend these meetings, thus giving the bosses greater advantages. Let us organize regular clubs and have a government for the people from which we are straying further and further each year.

Senator Owen is the author of an article in the current number of the Twentieth Century Magazine, entitled "The Initiative and Referendum," from which we take the following:

"The initiative is a method by which eight per cent of the voters can initiate a law and have it voted on by the people of the State, regardless of their representatives in the legislature.

"The Referendum is a method by which the five per cent of the voters of the State can by referendum petition cause a law passed by the legislature to be submitted to the vote of the people before it becomes a law—the vote of the people to be conclusive.

"The right of the people to instruct their representatives is an ancient right, never abandoned and is alienable by natural law, a law more ancient, venerable, masterful, indisputable than written constitutions.

"The nation is in good political health when its representatives are the free choice of the people and truly represent the ideals of the people in the legislative, executive and judicial departments of the government."

The following paragraph quoted from the Richmond Times-Dispatch of yesterday, will give some idea of the pace the good roads association and the different boards of county commissioners of North Carolina have been hitting for the last two years. The correspondent in speaking of the Times-Dispatch endurance run for autoists, which crossed from North Carolina to Virginia Thursday, says:

"North Carolina beats Virginia two to one on roads. Virginia was recognized when the border line was crossed by the condition of its highways.

"This is Virginia," dismally remarked one of the passengers in the first contesting car, "I know it by the roads," and it was Virginia."

THE TAIL OF A COMET

It Pays Dearly For Its Brilliant Gaseous Display.

FORMED BY LIGHT AND HEAT.

Far Away the Comet is a Globular Mass, and as it Nears the Sun the Action of That Body Untwines the Tail, Which is Never Recovered.

Traveling as comets do in very elongated ellipses, with the sun in one of the foci, as the attracting point is called, most of their journey is spent in slow uneventfulness far away from the hearth of the system—hearth is just what the word focus means. They are then small globular aggregations, sluggish and dim—a little roundish nebula in look. Such they appear when first described in the telescope coming in from space, for they are rarely seen at all until they have entered within the orbit of Mars. Distance in part, but still more their own behavior till then, keeps them hid.

Within this nebulousity, known as the head, appears as it nears us a bright spot, the nucleus. Suddenly there occurs a complete change in the department of the body, one which renders it the observed of all observers, and in less civilized times occasionally its being held the harbinger of distress, disease and death.

As soon as the comet gets near enough the heat of the sun sets up commotion within it. By very's determination of the temperature of the unblanketed sunward side of the moon we are enabled to infer that this heat is great at the earth's distance from the sun in spite of the cold of space. This temperature is 353 degrees F.

And as the comet approaches the sun this heat must increase inversely as the square of the distance. At half the radius of the earth orbit it is already four times as great above absolute zero, at a quarter sixteen times, and so on increasing, the temperature rising into thousands of degrees.

No wonder the comet acts as it does. It at once becomes uneasy, waxes in light and, as the spectroscope reveals, disruptive electric discharges start in it which let out the imprisoned gases. Then begins that spectacular career of perihelion passage which makes the comet so superb an object and for which it pays so dear. The gases which are thus thrust out from the interior of the separate meteorites, together with such particles of the iron as are made gaseous by the heat, fall prey to another force besides gravitation. This force is the impact of light itself, the light emitted by the sun.

That so immaterial a thing as a beam of light can have power to move even a pith ball is a conception not easy to grasp. Yet there is no doubt of the fact, theoretically calculated years ago by Clerk Maxwell from his electro-magnetic theory of light, for the gaseous particles proceed to be repelled by the sun at enormous speed, each behaving exactly as it should by mathematical analysis if such were the occasioning cause. Evidently the light waves have a propelling power in the direction of their own motion equal to their own speed.

Why, then, is it that the planets betray no such effect in spite of their size? The answer is, because of that very size. Gravity acts on the mass, a matter of three dimensions; the light force on the surface of the body, a matter of two. As a body diminishes in size, therefore, its surface bears a greater and greater ratio to its mass until when small enough the second force is the stronger of the two.

This relation is betrayed in the conduct of the tail. The imprisoned gases, heated to expulsion on the sunward side of the comet, rise toward it in a series of exquisite mantling envelopes, as if the comet's head were veiling itself from the too ardent gaze of the sun. Then, after rising to a certain height, their initial impetus overcome, they fall back, repelled by the light waves, although still attracted by gravity, and are driven out to form the tail of the comet, fresh envelopes taking their place.

Sometimes only a single tail is formed, but at others two or even three are shot out, and when this happens one is nearly straight, one curved and one greatly bent. Now, calculation shows that the repelling force in the case of the first is fourteen times that of gravity, in the second two and two-tenths times, or something less, and in the third only about one-fifth of gravity. But these are the very ratios which particles of hydrogen gas, of the hydrocarbons and of iron or sodium would respectively show.

As the comet approaches the sun the display becomes more violent and more spectacular. Finer and wilder grows the pageant, the "hairy star" loosening its tresses, which had stood sedately coiled about its head amid the depths of space, to stream in gorgeous gleams behind it as it pays its orbital obeisance to the ruler of its course. It seemingly backs away in keeping with the etiquette of royalty, turning always its face sunward as it retreats, whence it came.

But it pays dearly for its display. The matter going to form the tail can never be recovered, but is driven farther away. At each successive return to the sun some of its mass and brilliance is thus lost, and this is why the periodic comets, those that have made many visits, are such small and inconspicuous objects. It is only the comets of long ellipses and very distant habit of which the perihelion point is so fine.—Youth's Companion.

THE BASTILLE.

Rise and the Fall of the Famous State Prison of France.

The famous French prison known as the Bastille was started on April 22, 1356, by order of Charles V. The Bastille turned out to be an important structure in history, and its fall on July 15, 1789, marked the beginning of the French Revolution. It was originally intended by Charles as a defense against the English. When it came to be used as a state prison it was provided with vast bulwarks and ditches. The Bastille had four towers of five stories each on each of its large sides. It was partly in these towers and partly in underground cellars that the prisoners were situated. It was capable of containing from seventy to eighty prisoners, a number frequently reached during the reigns of Louis XIV. and Louis XV., the majority of them being persons of the higher ranks. On its site now stands the Column of July, erected in memory of the patriots of 1789 and 1830.

The name bastille, or basteil, in ancient times was given to any kind of structure calculated to withstand a military force, and thus, formerly in England and on the borders of Scotland, the term basteil house was usually applied to places of strength and fancied security. The French Bastille was originally called the Bastille St. Antoine.

Stephen Marcel, provost of the merchants, undertook the erection of the French Bastille. The building was enlarged in 1369 by Hugh Aubmot, provost of Paris under Charles V. He added two towers, which, being placed opposite to those already existing on each side of the gate, made of the Bastille a square fort, with a tower at each of the four angles.

After the death of Charles V., Aubriot, who had many enemies, was prosecuted for alleged crimes and was condemned to perpetual confinement in the Bastille, of which, according to some historians, he was the first prisoner. After some time he was removed thence to Fort l'Eveque, another prison, from which he was liberated in 1381 by the insurrection of the Maillottins.

After this insurrection, in 1382, the young king, Charles VI., still further enlarged the Bastille by adding four towers to it, each 100 feet high, thus giving it, instead of the square form it originally possessed, the shape of an oblong or parallelogram. To increase its strength the Bastille was surrounded by a ditch 25 feet deep and 120 feet wide. The road which formerly passed through it was turned to one side.

The Bastille from its commanding position was closely connected with important affairs in French history and was occupied by the Guises in 1588, by Charles IV. in 1584, the Frondeurs in 1649 and Conde in 1652.

It was natural, therefore, that the Bastille should be one of the first objects of attack at the outbreak of the Revolution. In July 15, 1793, the populace of Paris, recruited chiefly from the Faubourg St. Antoine, attacked the fortress and stormed it after a half hearted resistance by the governor, De Launay, and a handful of Swiss. The governor and seven of his men were killed, the archives of the prison scattered, and the prisoners, seven in number, were carried through the streets and hailed as victims of tyranny and martyrs in the people's cause. The building itself was torn down. The anniversary of the taking of the Bastille is celebrated every year as the national holiday of France.

An Old Time Encyclopedia.

An ancient encyclopedia was that compiled by a Chinese. In 1403 an emperor of the Ming dynasty ordered that such a work should be undertaken, and in 1410 the 100 volumes were ready for block printing. This process in ancient China was accomplished by pasting written copy on blocks of wood and cutting the letters in relief. The work of printing the encyclopedia seemed so arduous that it was abandoned, and the work remained in manuscript. The books of the encyclopedia were one foot and eight inches in length and half an inch thick and were bound in yellow silk. They were stored in Peking and were burned during the siege of that city by the allied forces in 1901.—Harper's Weekly.

His Hard Luck.

His horse went dead, and his mule went lame, and he lost six cows in a poker game; then a hurricane came on a summer's day and blew the house where he lived away, and the earthquake came when that was gone and swallowed the land that the house was on; then the tax collector came around and charged him up with the hole in the ground.—Upon (Ga.) Parrot.

A MOTHER'S REVERIE.

The Yesterdays of Her Boy as They Pass Before Her.

Yesterday you looked at me with your father's eyes. You clasped my finger with your tiny ones, clinging as for your life, and a tiny spark of life was kindled in my cold heart. Yesterday you walked alone, you stood proudly erect, flung back your head, with your father's own gesture, and said, "Boy."

Yesterday you wore your first little trousers and were indeed "mother's big boy." You have very likely forgotten, but I never shall, the huge monster of a dog that barked at us on our walk that day. You sprang before me and faced it valiantly. You stretched out your tiny arms and shrieked: "Go way! Don't you hurt my mother!"

Yesterday you came blindly to my sitting room with swollen eyes and blood stained lips. As I bathed and patched and trembled you blurted out: "He called you a name! Let any feller dare call my mother a name! I punched him good! Let him just dash say that again! He said you was a widow!" Dear little warrior, with your father's own chivalry! No wonder my starved heart feasted upon those divine crumbs of comfort.

Yesterday I sent you to college. I hope my misgivings showed not at all in the face. Yesterday I went to "the game." I sat with blanched cheeks and smiling lips through two hours of agony. I saw my stalwart son pounced upon, battered, victorious. I waved my hand to him as they carried him out on their shoulders, and he turned from all that shrieking throng—to me. It is hard to be a Spartan mother, but "Hands off!" You came straight to me after the rub down and said, "Mother, you're a brick!" You didn't know that I still shook inside.

Yesterday you left your college days behind you. You came to me after all the feasting and merry-making as I sat quiet again after awhile. We talked, you and I, of what you were to make of that larger life now so near at hand. My heart was glad to hear you say you would choose that same honorable calling to which your father's best was given. And I said to you then, as I have ever said, "Make of your life something clean and straight and honest, as was his." Your mother has watched to see you struggle against the waves of temptation.

But you have kept that promise. She has seen the man grow out of the youth not perfect, but facing toward the right. Dear boy, your mother is glad to tell you that.

Yesterday you told me. I had seen it coming—seen it even in spite of my cowardly denials to myself. She is a dear girl, an ideal mate for my manly son, and I pray you may be happy together. Yesterday was your wedding day—bright, beautiful, sunny. Never until I die shall I have to do anything again so hard as to stand through that solemn service.

Yesterday, my crowning yesterday, my heart sings as I write and is happy again, truly happy, as I never expected to feel in this world. You came to me, tall, straight, with a new expression of manliness in your eyes, and said: "Mother, he has come—my son! Isn't it wonderful?" You came to meet me and gathered me up in your strong arms and held me close to the heart that had rested so often on mine. Your voice came to me, softened with the tears of which your manhood was not ashamed. "Little mother," it whispered, "I never knew till now what you have suffered all these years to be alone—poor little mother!"—Helen Peck in New Idea Woman's Magazine.

Encouraging Progress.

"Well, John, I haven't seen you for years and years, it seems to me," said Henry as the two met at a family homecoming. "How are all the folks? Suppose the boys have all grown up by this time?"

"Yes," answered John and with a pardonable show of pride, "Harry, you know, is a full fledged doctor now."

"Yes, yes; I suppose he is. It hardly seems possible. And how is he getting on?"

"Oh, fine!" answered the proud father. "He operated on his sixth patient the other day, and the map lived nearly two hours."—Newark Star.

Not a Modern Custom.

In a certain church in Philadelphia the custom has prevailed of presenting to each scholar of the Sunday school an egg during the exercises at the celebration of Easter. On an occasion of the kind the assistant clergyman arose and made this announcement: "Hymn 419, 'Begin my soul, the exalted lay, after which the eggs will be distributed.'"—Lippincott's.

HANDCUFFS.

Various Devices That Have Been Used in Fettering Prisoners.

In Vergil is to be found the first recorded instance of the use of handcuffs, for the poet tells us that Proteus was thus fettered and rendered powerless by Aristaeus, who apparently knew that even the gods themselves were not proof against this form of persuasion.

In the fourth century B. C. an army of victorious Greeks found several chariots full of handcuffs among the baggage of the defeated Carthaginians, and it is highly probable that the ancient Egyptians had some contrivance of the kind. The word is derived from the Anglo-Saxon "handcop," whence comes evidently the slang term "copper."

In earliest Saxon days "handcops" were used for nobles and "foot cops" for kings, but in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries the word is supplanted by the terms "shack bolt" and "swivel manacle," and the instruments were as cumbersome as the names by which they were known.

Up to the middle of the last century there were two kinds of handcuff in general use. One, known as the "flexible," was very like that which is still used; the other kind, called the "figure eight," was used to restrain violent prisoners. It was so fashioned that the captive could not move his hands and was universally dreaded, for the pain caused by a limb immovably confined is almost unbearable.

A simple but powerful device for securing prisoners was the "twister," now abolished owing to the injuries it inflicted. It consisted of a chain with handles at each end. The chain was put around the wrists, and the handles were brought together and twisted until a firm grip was obtained. The least struggle on the part of the captive and the chains bit deep into his wrists. Of the same nature, but made of wire, is "la ligote," while in an emergency whipcord has proved perfectly satisfactory.

The handcuff used in some parts of eastern Europe is most primitive. It consists of a V shaped piece of metal, in which the wrists are inserted, the open ends being then drawn together by means of a cross hook, which must be kept taut the whole time. The most handy form of cuff, which is in general use at present, comes from America. It is lighter and much less clumsy than the old "flexible."

It is no easy matter to clap the "bracelets" on a person who is struggling violently. Inventors should turn their attention to the subject, for much remains to be done before a fighting prisoner can be quickly and strongly secured without harm to himself or his captor.—London Globe.

The Tuaregs.

In his book "Across the Sahara" Hans Vischer writes: "On a spot recently uncovered by the wind I picked up blunt arrowheads and knives, Carthaginian coins, money lost by Romans and Arabs, and fragments of beautifully colored marble slabs which probably once adorned some Roman villa on the hills."

Strange peoples were met in that long march across the Sahara—the Tuaregs, for instance, who need not a suffragist attack to bring them to their senses, for among the Tuaregs it is the man, the brute, who by all the laws of the country has to obey the woman. Descent is traced through the mother. Woman shows her proud face to all the world, while the man goes veiled."

The Artist and His Work.

The great artists, like the great heroes, have always done whatever came to hand. Michelangelo grumbled and said he was a sculptor when Julius II set him to paint, but he painted the roof of the Sistine chapel. Shakespeare chafed at the popularity of the fool in the drama of his time and then produced the fool in "Lear." If either of them had waited for perfect conditions and an inspiration untrammelled by circumstances he would have done nothing. They produced masterpieces because they made the best of things as they were. And this is the business of the artist in life.—London Times.

LONDON BANK CLERKS.

Their Dress and Mode of Living a Century Ago.

A hundred years ago the number of bank clerks in London must have been inconsiderable. The old banks needed only small staffs. Quite late in the eighteenth century one of the biggest conducted its business with two clerks. The engagement of a third created great excitement. His arrival was still more exciting, for we are assured that "he wore a long flapped coat with large pockets; the sleeves had broad cuffs, with three large buttons, somewhat like the coats worn by Greenwich pensioners; an embroidered waistcoat reaching nearly down to his knees, with an enormous bouquet in the buttonhole; a cocked hat, powdered hair, with pigtail and bagwig, and gold headed cane." This, no doubt, was something of a peacock, even for his time. A few years later, in the early part of the nineteenth century, the correct official garb was knee breeches, silk stockings, shoes with silver buckles and often a white tie. One can scarcely imagine a dress more suggestive of sober opulence.

But it does not seem that, according to our ideas, the manner of life was quite in harmony with this impressive appearance. Not for the bank clerk of the early eighteenth century the immaculately clean and elaborately fitted restaurants of the modern city! Not for him tea shops with varieties of harmless drinks and tempting light food! If he wanted a meal he went to the butcher and bought himself a chop or steak for fivepence halfpenny or sixpence. This he carried himself to an adjacent public house, where they cooked it for a penny. The public house, in fact, played no small part in his life.

Is it not a tradition that the clearing house has grown from the meetings of clerks in a tavern, where they met for the purpose of settling up accounts among themselves?—London Telegraph.

RARE WILD BEASTS.

The Kadiak Bear and the Tufted Ear Rhinoceros.

There are a number of beasts specimens of which are ardently desired not only by the zoological gardens of the world, but by the professional menageries as well. Among these may be mentioned the Kadiak bear, an extremely rare animal and one calculated to make a Rocky mountain grizzly appear insignificant.

South America contains a prize in the form of a species of jaguar never held in captivity. This jaguar is of tremendous size and coal black.

There are two rare birds in the Amazon forests whereof no specimens have ever been brought away—the "beh bird" and the "lost soul." These names are derived from the effects produced by the cries of the birds, the former having a voice likened to that of a silver bell and the latter possessing the eerie accompaniment of crooning in such a manner as to produce gooseflesh on the unfortunate person who hears its song.

The naturalists will also vote an expression of heartfelt thanks to the individual who will fetch them from far-off Burma a specimen of a rhinoceros having a black hide and big, tufted ears. No one has ever actually seen this rhinoceros; but, it is averred, white men have frequently seen his hide.

New Zealand is a land of animal mysteries. The most popular of the rare beasts whereof specimens are longed for by the civilized world is a kind of duck billed beast. No one seems certain what it should be called. Darwin, it is added, was always of the opinion that some day a true lizard-bird—i. e., not a flying lizard, but a true missing link between the birds and the reptiles—might be found in New Zealand.—Harper's Weekly.

The Catalpa Tree.

The catalpa tree is the slouch of the forest. It has a brief season of beauty, but this outburst of charm is so exceedingly ephemeral when compared with the long weeks and months when it seems to be fairly reveling in litter that the wonder is its presence is tolerated to the extent it has been in years gone by. We believe it was Lord Byron who once indulged in a few rhapsodical interances over the catalpa blossoms, but it is safe to say he never had to clean up a yard which was marred by the presence of one or more of the trees or the sentiments expressed would have been in other than poetic vein.—Des Moines Capital.

The Spinning Ant.
The spinning ant is found in India, in Ceylon, in the islands of Malacca and in Australia. This ant weaves its nest between two leaves of a tree, preferably the mango. It begins to build or to weave by drawing two leaves together. To do this it runs a line of its working material—material similar to the spider's thread—the length of the leaf and around it. While at work it clings to the leaf with its nails and at the same time draws on the leaf nearest to it with its mandibles. Sometimes the two leaves suitable for nest building are too far apart. Then the builder calls in its fellow ants, and they help it to form a chain. Each ant clings to the waist of its neighbor by its mandibles. Thus enchained, they work to build the nest of their comrade.—Harper's Weekly.

The Father of Medicine.
It is generally understood that scientific medicine began with Hippocrates, B. C. 460. This great man carried out a system of severe induction from observed facts and abhorred mere theories which had no basis in actual experience. He was always open to conviction and candidly confessed his mistakes. He was conscientious in the practice of his profession and valued the success of his art more than silver and gold. The great principle of his practice was trust in nature. He had great skill in diagnosis and was extremely cautious in all that he did. He originated the celebrated maxim, "Life is short, and art is long." For more than twenty centuries Hippocrates was the great authority among medical men the world over.—New York American.

An Eccentric Lord.
Matthew Robinson (Lord Rokeby), a prominent but eccentric Englishman of the eighteenth century, became famous for his long beard and his pronounced hatred of medical practitioners. His dislike for physicians was carried to such an extreme that he left a codicil to his will which was to the effect that a favorite nephew was to be disinherited should he (the nephew) in the last illness of the lord let his sympathies cause him to send for a doctor. This having been made known to the nephew when his uncle, the lord, was in good health, it is needless to add he allowed that person's spirit to take its flight without calling in any of the "infernal surgical fraternity."

Timber Books.
There is at Cassel a library probably unique in the world. It is bound in timber, printed on timber pages—possibly from wood blocks—and deals exclusively with timber. The library in question is the Holzbibliothek, which was compiled at the end of the last century by Karl Schieldbach and is composed of about 500 volumes made from trees in the park at Wilhelmshohe. Every volume bears on a tab—not in timber, but, queerly enough, in morocco—the name of the tree from which it was obtained. There are plates of the tree in all stages of its growth, and the letterpress is a treatise on the foresting and natural history of the tree.

A Cool Soldier.
Remarkable for his self possession even in the most trying moments of battle was the famous Marshal MacMahon. One day he was dictating a letter to his secretary in the midst of an action when a shell from the enemy's camp fell directly upon his tent and exploded within a few feet. Pale with fright, the secretary sprang up, leaving his letter.

"What's the matter?" asked the marshal.

"The shell!" gasped the frightened subordinate.

"And what has the shell to do with the letter you are writing? Go on with your work, sir."

Faast of the Garlands.
In several of the more remote Swiss cantons there is held what is called the feast of the garlands. The marriageable maidens assemble at sunset, sing, dance and make merry. Each wears a chaplet of flowers on her forehead and carries a nosegay tied with a bright colored ribbon. If a lad is attracted by a maid he plucks a flower from her bunch. She pretends not to notice, but when the merrymaking breaks up at dawn she will, if she reciprocates his feelings, tie the entire bouquet by a ribbon to the handle of the cabin wherein he resides.

An Ancient Astronomer.
About 500 B. C. Anaxagoras of Ionia was born. When he "grew up in wisdom" he was the first to teach the course and cause of both solar and lunar eclipses and to give his followers rules whereby they could distinguish planets from fixed stars. He was punished for declaring that the sun was not a god.
