BUILDING SAND-CLAY ROADS.

The benefits of sand-clay roads is growing on the people of the county. The first experimental two miles built on the old plank road from the town limits outward, was an educator in road building, and awakened interest in all who passed over it and saw its excellence and the cheapness with which it was constructed. That road caused the people over on the Farmville road to want one, and by voluntary contributions they raised a fund to tender to the county commissioners to augment the work of the convict force if placed on that road. The tender was accepted, the convicts were put on that road and it was improved with sand-clay for several miles.

The people on the river or Falkland road, seeing what their neighbors over on the road leading towards Farmville had done, likewise got busy. They raised voluntary contributions among themselves to the amount of several hundred dollars, and tendered it to the commissioners to be expended in using the convict force on that road. The force is now at work there, and ere long there will be several miles more of good road.

While such steps on the part of the people for local road improvement is commendable, yet it is slow and would require years and years to get good roads over any considerable portion of the county if built only in this way. Still every section of good road that is built awakens that much more interest, and ere long the people all over the county may be aroused to the determination to have good roads as quickly as possible. Sand-clay roads are the most available and the cheapest that can be constructed in this section and if the people of every township will get active, good roads can soon be built all over the county.

It should need no arguing now that Greenville needs an opera house. Since the February fire the town has been without a building for amusement and public assemblies. The loss of this is felt more keenly in the fall and winter, when theatrical and opera companies are on the road. There being no place here in which they can appear, the people lose this winter amusement, unless they go to neighboring towns. Only a few can do this, as it is expensive and consumes time. Greenville should have an opera house. The town is too large to be without one.

In keeping with his love for notoriety and the spectacular, Colonel Roosevelt took a brief flight in an airship at St. Louis, Tuesday afternoon. He waved his hands so vigorously at the watching multitude on the ground below, that the aviator Makers of the Future.

Just a few years from now the boys and girls of today will be men and women—the men and women whose privilege and duty it will be to lead in every line of work, to decide what shall be done and how it shall be done, to rule the state to mold in a large degree the future of this good land of ours forever afterward. Right now, too, these boys and girls are determining the kind of men and women they will be, are deciding whether they will do great things or small, whether they will do them well or ill, whether under their guidance the country shall become richer and fairer and happier, or be handed down to these "who in their turn shall follow them," a less desirable heritage than the fathers and mothers of today are giving them.

As to how they will decide, as to the future they will bring about, we have no fear and no question. The very thrill of worthy ambition, the longing to do good work, to make all work noble and every life useful is strong in the hearts of the young men and women of today. They are dreaming beautiful dreams and doing hard work to make these dreams reality. Bright, earnest, tender girls; strong, clean, purposeful boys—these are the sort of boys and girls one finds on the farm today. The girl whose life holds no worthy purpose, the boy whose idea is to get through life as easily as possible are the exceptions.

Opportunities they have, too, such as few generations of boys and girls have ever enjoyed. They are reaping the harvest sown, in days darker than they will ever know, by fathers and mothers whose courage never failed, who did not give up the task because it was hard. It is theirs to enjoy the fruits of these labors and to prepare themselves right now to do their work as well.—Raleigh Progressive Farmer and Gazette.

The Low Cost of Proper Living.

Fully one-third of a man's earnings are consumed at the table. This is not because such expenditure is necessary, but because the majority of people have little knowledge of food values, and buy impractically and improvidently. As an example; during the course of some investigations pursued in one of the poorer districts of Chicago, it was found that a woman whose husband was unemployed, and whose family was living on a few cents a day, bought lettuce, an article of absolute no food value and one that is classed among the table luxuries. Higher up in the social scale, we find the housekeeper buying fish, upon which there is often a waste of seventy per cent., (in head, tail skin, and bones), expensive cuts of meats when cheaper ones are more nutritious, and so forth. We must accustom ourselves to the thought that the value of a food is not its market price, but the amount of heat and energy it gives out in the process of digestion. For while eating should be a highly enjoyable pastime, fundamentally we eat to live, and the function, if we may so term it, of all food, is to give out sufficient heat to re-charge, to energize as it were, the tissues of the body, which are constantly undergoing changes of breaking down and building up.—November Designer.

Old Fashioned Doughnuts.

Cream together two cupfuls of sugar and a half cupful of butter, beat three eggs light and add these and a cupful and a half of milk to the sugar and butter. Sift three spoonfuls of baking powder twice with five cupfuls of flour and put this with the other ingredients. When you have a dough which can be rolled out, stop adding flour lest your doughnuts be too stiff and tough. Roll out the dough, cut it into rounds, cut smaller rounds from the center of each circle and fry in boiling fat to a golden brown. Lay on soft paper in a colander and sprinkle with powdered sugar.—The Dellheator.

And Now the Fall Stove Question

And it is a question, isn't it? You've heard of so many stoves and read so many advertisements that you wonder what to believe. We don't want to try and tell you here about our splendid line of "Buck's"—we couldn't if we would; space would not permit. But, we know you want the best stove or range that your money can buy, one that will last you a lifetime and give you the best of service and that's why we want you to call and see our "Buck's"—we know they are best and that is why they are on our floors.

"BACK TO THE FARM"

X.—The Farm as a Place to Grow Old.

By C. V. GREGORY.

(Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.)

It used to be the ambition of the farmer to make money enough so that he could afford to move to town and spend the rest of his days in comfort. Now it is the ambition of the city dweller to accumulate enough of this world's goods to enable him to purchase a little place in the country and grow old in the open air.

This change is typical of the change in sentiment that has taken place in regard to country life. This change in sentiment is due in a large measure to a change in country life itself.

At first country life was essentially the life of the pioneer. It was a life of hardships, and the reward was only a few of life's necessities. But these hardships developed a class of hardy, virile men who have conquered the American continent and brought it under man's control.

The days of pioneering on the farm are well nigh past. Now that the rough edges are worn off the true pleasure of life in the open is beginning to be appreciated. At first people crowded together in the cities for protection, later for convenience in transacting business. The city never was intended primarily as a place to live. In the early days the cities were deserted as soon as the danger which had forced the people together was over. They scattered out to their farms, where they could live in peace and plenty.

When the development of the city as a business center began no particular provision was made for the home life. People lived where they could, existing for their business rather than making their business exist for them. In all the years in which the cities of the United States have been developing the home life always has lagged behind. True, some of the men who were most successful in accumulating wealth built palatial homes. But there is no room in the city for many such homes. Rather must people live tiered one above another, layer upon layer. On all sides, above and below, the space in which they are free to move at will is marked by strictly defined limits. No wonder that in such circumstances man has longed for a fourth dimension in which he could expand.

People have endured these conditions because it paid them to do so. Business fed and clothed them, but business demanded that they be always close at hand. They knew that somewhere outside the web of paved streets lay an open country, but they knew of no way in which they could make a living there. The stories they heard from the country were stories of poorly paid toil, few pleasures and a premature old age. They preferred the discomforts to which they were accustomed.

The coming of electric transportation widened the horizon of the city. It made it possible for the best paid laborers to have houses of their own. It allowed the salaried man, who put in fewer hours, to live almost in the country. With a glimpse of suburban and country life and what it really meant to have plenty of room to breathe, the city dweller began to cherish an ambition. He began to long for an acre of his own, with a garden and a few berries and some chickens, where he could rest and grow old.

The advance in the price of food products made it not only possible, but comparatively easy, for the man who has given the best years of his life to the city to retire to the country. Perhaps I should not use the word retire. The swirling rush of twentieth century life has made the thought of retiring distasteful. The ambitious man lets go his work with reluctance. He would rather die in the harness than to rust away his remaining days in idleness. But there comes a time when the strongest man feels his grip weaken and his mind falter. The hard knocks of a strenuous life begin to make themselves felt. The long hours grow weary on his shoulders. Some men are situated so fortunately that they can let go by degrees, working as they feel like it and turning over to others the tasks of which they tire. Most men, however, must continue to meet the exacting demands of business to the farthest notch or drop out entirely. It is to them that the country makes its strongest appeal.

A house and an acre or more of land can be purchased or rented more cheaply than a house and lot in the city. The home can be supplied with all the conveniences that the family were used to in the city. The trolley and the telephone keep them in touch with their city friends. The city man who is past the days of the hard work demanded in a mercantile establishment or a factory can still make a fair living from the soil. The returns from an even acre or so of ground will go far toward paying the family's living expenses.

The pleasure of life in the open, where the air is pure and there is time to dream and room to be happy, will add years to the lives of the new made farmer and his wife. The freedom from responsibility calls back the light heartedness of youth. The tyranny of office hours is done away with. The luxury of independence is attained.

No sign of the return to the country is more encouraging than the tendency of the old farmers and their wives to spend the remainder of their days in the country. Some of the old farmers who move to town to end their days are satisfied perhaps, but most of them are not. The enforced idleness galls them. The narrow boundaries of a city lot stifle them. They miss their old friends and associates.

The home farm is a much better place than the city for the farmer to spend his declining years for many reasons. It is home to him, and a thousand pleasant memories cling around every knoll and tree. He can turn over to one of the boys the active work of managing the farm and still have most of the pleasure of farming without the responsibility. It may mean the construction of another house perhaps, but the expense will be less than the cost of a house in the city. There are always little tasks to be done when he feels like work, yet he can quit when he feels like quitting. When he is not in a mood to work there are always neighbors to visit. With his automobile or his horse and buggy he and his wife can go where and when they please. Thus the days pass pleasantly and smoothly, without a ripple of discontent or the strain of getting used to a new environment. The passing years leave few marks on either the farmer or his wife, for this sort of life is not calculated to encourage the advance of old age.

From the standpoint of the community the retired farmers are a valuable asset. A number of such families in the community give permanency to its social life. With little else to do and plenty of time to do it in the farmer and his wife can go ahead with the management of the club or grange. They can devise picnics and suppers and go ahead with lecture courses and celebrations.

These things are of incalculable benefit to any community, and yet too often the young farmers are too busy to look after all the details connected with them.

In looking after the business affairs of the township and county and state the farmer who is out of active business finds an outlet for his surplus energies. Township offices are by no means lucrative. Yet it is essential for the good of the community that they be filled by men who will take time to see that the township affairs are properly conducted. A farmer who no longer has a business of his own to demand his best attention is just the man for such a place.

The county supervisors have charge of a great amount of business. Upon the efficiency of their work depends the condition of the roads and bridges. The management of a county is no small job, yet it is too often entrusted to some office seeking politician because there is no one else who has time for the place. Here is another opportunity for the retired farmer.

ONE OF A RETIRED FARMER'S SIDE LINES.

He has plenty of time to do the work properly and to investigate any matters that come up. He is a substantial property holder, and his acts are in the line of conservative progress and in the main always right. He takes a more impartial view of things than if he were in active business for himself. The experience of years helps him to govern justly.

For the farmer with more ability and larger ambitions positions in the state legislature are open. Our legislatures are especially in need of more intelligent farmers in the lawmakers' seats. These men are unimpeachably honest, and they know how to strike an average between a do nothing policy and one of reckless extravagance. The country needs men who have lived long enough to gain wisdom and experience. These men need the country. For the best good of themselves and for the best good of the nation they should grow old in the country.

Weather Forecast.
"I do not think," says Edmund Yates in his book, "Recollections and Experiences," "I ever met a man more hopelessly deaf than Charles Kemble at seventy. Some of us were sitting one afternoon at the Garrick club when a tremendous thunderstorm broke over the house."
"It raged with extraordinary fury, one clap exploding with terrific noise immediately above us like a volley of artillery."
"We looked round at each other almost in horror, when Charles Kemble, who was calmly reading, lifted his eyes from his book and said in his trumpet tone, 'I think we are going to have some thunder; I feel it in my knees.'"
Financial Disaster.
The Italian fruiterer who had vainly endeavored to instill true commercial instincts into the mind of his errant son was bewailing his fate at his offspring's perverse conduct:
"I leave him for two minutes at a my stand, and what do you think? He ruins the bus—total ruin. He sells the front row of the orange."—New York

The Lamps of the Sea.
Many kinds of jellyfish are phosphorescent at night and present a wonderfully beautiful appearance when slowly moving through the water, and it is this phosphorescence which has given them the poetic title of "the lamps of the sea." They are not less beautiful in the daytime, for most of the species are striped or tinted, some being melon shaped, with rows of fringes dividing the sections. The tentacles are often plumed, and, while waving about in graceful curves, attract or gather in the food of the animal. The "Portuguese man-of-war" is probably the best known, as well as most attractive in form, of the whole family.

Advice.
"Doctor," cried little Bingle over his telephone, "my wife has lost her voice. What the dickens shall I do?"
"Why," said the doctor gravely, "if I were you I'd remember the fact when Thanksgiving day comes around and act accordingly."
Whereupon the doctor chuckled as he charged little Bingle $2 for professional services.—Harper's Weekly.

The Irishman's Resource.

In his volume of essays, "Drama Dead Earnest and Half Jest." Mr. Coulson Kernahan compares his compatriots, the natives of the Green Isle, with the English:
"That your Englishman never knows when he is beaten is the veriest platitude. In all the world there is no nationality which can play a losing game with such desperate doggedness. I venture to think, however, that the Irishman—and therein is perhaps a reason why he excels in the art of war—is more resourceful, is quicker to think and quicker to act.
"An Englishman, finding himself in a corner so tight that any one else would decide at once that there was nothing for it but surrender or retreat, says, 'Here I am, and here I'll stick to be shot at till I'm killed or till relief comes.' An Irishman in the same place would say: 'It's the mischief's own hole I'm in! But wait now! What way 'll I be getting out?' And get out the Irishman generally does, for he is so resourceful that his resourcefulness might sometimes be better described as slipperiness."

The Making of a Business Man.

So many panes of glass in old Mr. Viner's greenhouse had been broken that he had at last offered a reward of 10 shillings to any one who should give information as to the identity of the latest offender. The bait soon drew. A youngster called on Mr. Viner and informed him that a lad named Archie Thompson was a guilty party. He received his reward, went away rejoicing, and the old gentleman forth with wrote to the local schoolmaster demanding the production of the said Archie Thompson to make good the damage he had done to his windows. Next day the informer called again. "The schoolmaster sent me," he said briskly. "I've seen a glazier, and he'll put your glass right for 3 shillings here it is, and"
"Not so fast, my lad," said Mr. Viner. "Have you come on behalf of Archie Thompson?"
"Well, yes, sir, in a way," said the boy. "Fact is," he continued confidentially, "I'm him!"—London Answers.

Wesley and Tea.

In his younger days John Wesley found it difficult to stop drinking tea. He wrote in 1740: "We agreed it would prevent great expense, as well of health as of time and of money, if the poorer people of our society could be persuaded to leave off drinking of tea. We resolved ourselves to begin and set the example. I expect some difficulty in breaking off a custom of six and twenty years' standing, and accordingly the first three days my head ached and I was half asleep for morning to night. The third day my memory failed almost entirely. On Thursday my headache was gone, my memory as strong as ever, and I have found no inconvenience, but a sensible benefit in several respects from that day to this."
Later in life Wesley returned to the use of tea, as his big teapot preserved in his house in London shows.—Chicago News.

Once a Sailor Always a Sailor.

Charitable institutions often find it hard to learn the occupations of those admitted. A man who has followed several trades when asked his occupation names the one he regards as most dignified, even if he has not followed it for years. The Survey tells of a case that happened in the Cook County infirmary. The man "at the age of nineteen was a sailor for one year. His career as a sailor ended with an accident on the ship by which he lost a leg. For the next thirty-six years he took various jobs as caretaker and the like, such as a crippled person can obtain. Yet when after thirty-six years of independence he was finally forced to take refuge in a poorhouse he puts himself down on the entrance card as a sailor, and one feels in that word the pride of a Norse son of the sea."

A Nickname For Barrett.

Lawrence Barrett, the tragedian, was subject to dyspepsia, and when he was suffering from that disorder he was cold and distant toward his company. One irreverent fellow always refused, however, to be suppressed. He said one day: "Just look at Cassius. He looks as solemn and righteous as if he'd swallowed the sword of justice. Let's call him the Scabbard." And the Scabbard he was—out of his hearing—for the rest of that season.

Costly Dressing.

Mrs. Washington Terrace consented to be interviewed.
"What? Dress on $600 a year?"
She made a wry grimace with her face and hands.
"Why, I couldn't dress my salads on $600 a year," she said.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A Striped One.

"Now, children, what is this?" asked the teacher, holding up a picture of a zebra.
"It looks to me like a horse in a bathing suit," answered a little boy.—Our Dumb Animals.

Two Views.

High Notes.

A reporter once said to Caruso:
"What is your price per night?"
"Per night?" Caruso, chuckled. "You mean per note."

The Devil of the Desert.

It is not generally known how a devil rides a camel, but Mr. Hans Vicher acquired the information and imparts it in his volume, "Through the Sahara." One night a camel suddenly ran amuck. Other camels followed suit and a general panic ensued. "The frightened yells of my escort told me that a ghoul, a wicked demon of the desert, had seized the camel. I was told how these evil spirits sometimes took a fancy to mount a camel; the camel would then look to see who was digging it in the ribs, and, perceiving no one, fear would grip its heart, for then it knew that the devil was on its back."

Malleable Glass of the Egyptians.

Strabo and Josephus both affirm that the Egyptian glass workers were so well skilled in their art that they imitated the amethyst and other precious stones to perfection. Malleable glass was one of the secret arts of the ancients, the formula for making it being now reckoned as lost. Strabo mentions a cup of glass which could be hammered into any desired shape, the material of which it was composed being as ductile as lead.

How Plants Remain Upright.

If a flowerpot is laid on its side the stalk of the plant growing in it gradually curves upward until it resumes the vertical position. This is called geotropic curvature, and the question is by what means the plant is stimulated to change its direction of growth. One theory avers that movable starch grains in the plant cells fall to the lower side as the position is changed and by their pressure influence the mechanism of growth.

Hj World.

Pretty Gtri (to Charles, her betrothed)—Charley, how far is it around the world? Isn't it 24,000?"
Charles (putting both arms around her)—That's all a mistake, love. It is only about twenty-four inches."

A Legal View.

"The Bible says that no man can serve two masters."
"Yes. That's probably the first law against bigamy ever put down."—Cleveland Leader.

Curious.

Isn't it curious that when it is one minute after 8 o'clock it is past 8, when it is thirty minutes after it is only half past 8?

Be brief, for it is with words as with sunbeams—the more they are condensed the deeper they burn.—Southey.

Greenville cotton 14 5-8.
By Wire to The Reflector.
New York, Oct. 13.—Following the opening of the cotton market today with prices from 15 to 20 points above Tuesday's close, the price crossed 15 cents amidst great excitement. Liverpool prices being up 10 points assisted materially in forcing up the New York market. There was steady buying for mill accounts. Opening: October 14.75; November 14.82; December 14.82; January 14.83; March 14.99.

New York, Oct. 13.—Led by steel common, which opened at 71 3-4, a gain of nearly a half point over Tuesday's close, the stock market ruled strong and active with practically every stock quoting substantial gains. Standard railroad stocks were strong, all being traded in freely. General Electric gained a point and was a feature among high priced industrials.

Chicago, Oct. 13.—Strength in Liverpool following sharp decline of Tuesday caused a bulge of 3-8 to 5-8c in wheat in the start. Shorts bought well on the decline and caused a slight reaction. Corn bulged 1-8 to 1-4 in sympathy. Oats started weak and declined further. Provisions were higher. Opening: December wheat, 96 corn 48 1-8; oats 31 7-8; pork, January, 17.40.
