RENO ISSUES 30 DIVORCES TO TAR HEELS

Mrs. Ann Reynolds Most Prominent Of Those Seeking Easy Laws.

Reno, Nev., Nov. 28.—(AP)—Thirty couples who were either married in North Carolina or now live in that state took advantage of Nevada's easy divorce laws and had their marriages dissolved here during the last seven months.

Most prominent among the divorcees is Mrs. Ann Cannon Reynolds, of the wealthy Concord, N. C. towel manufacturing family, who received her divorce this month from Smith Reynolds, scion of the tobacco family. She was granted her decree on a charge of cruelty after young Reynolds had settled $1,000,000 on her and their baby daughter, Ann Cannon Reynolds, II. Other couples and brief histories of their cases include:

Jack L. Goodwin vs. Nina Goodwin; married Nov. 12, 1918; at Raleigh, N. C.; desertion at Durham, N. C., February of 1930. One child. Divorced in July.

ABOUT TOWN

Indian Summer weather which this section has been enjoying the last month is at an end. If we are to take any stock in forecasts made by the Charlotte weather bureau.

The forecaster said that from now on the section might expect normal winter weather. The wise man will take advantage of the forecast and begin refilling his coal bin, probably depleted by the cool spell several weeks ago.

Then, also, is the important matter of comfortably clothing the body against the chill. The coming of winter brings us face to face with the problem of providing for the hundreds who will not be adequately clothed without the aid of the public. The Welfare Department is making an effort to take care of the situation but it is going to be a greater task than this organization can cope with without the whole-hearted support of the public.

Perhaps there are some who have clothing they should like to donate to this cause. If so why not get in touch with the department and advise the director of it. He will be glad to receive this extra help. Keep the poor in mind as the cold winter winds begin whistling around your home and see that you are one of the many to contribute to this worthy cause.

Christmas is just around the corner now and it is time the people were turning their attention to the important business of doing their shopping for his season of the year.

Greenville stores have purchased one of the most complete and extensive displays of Christmas goods in years, and people who visit them will be able to obtain values at much less than charged by stores in other sections of the county.

Greenville, the principal shopping center of Eastern Carolina, won this reputation through offering the best of goods at the lowest prices, and thousands of people from a radius of many miles have taken advantage of the opportunity.

Santa Claus will arrive as early as usual this year and in a few days now show windows will blaze with hundreds of multi-colored lights, carrying their messages of Yuletide joys and happiness.

If you have not given your purchase consideration, why not do so while you think of it and avoid the rush always in evidence during the last minute shopping?

Greenville high school football team concluded the season in a blaze of glory Thanksgiving by walloping the strong Farmville aggregation. It was described as one of the finest exhibitions played on the local gridiron this season and those who braved chilling winds to witness it were amply rewarded for doing so.

The brilliant finish presages good things for next season and the public may be assured of seeing the club offer more serious competition for conference honors. Coach Porter was forced to start the season with practically all green material and consequently lost the majority of conference games, but with the splendid development shown against Farmville, the lovers of this kind of sport may look forward to something more thrilling next season.

The High School Athletics Association has found it difficult to make ends meet the last few years. In fact, the treasury was so depleted at the beginning of the football season that the boys were not able to provide sufficient equipment to protect themselves while at play. Through the generosity of some of the civic clubs, however, considerable material was purchased and the season was finished, in much better form in this respect than it was begun.

Basketball season will be in the offing at an early date and supporters of the schools will have an opportunity to contribute their part to the success of this field of sports. It is to be hoped attendance will be larger than at the football games and that the youngsters will be able to make one of the best showings in years.

Joseph Daniels, writing in the News and Observer, is of the opinion George Washington would change his version of Greenville were he able to visit the community at this time.

Mr. Daniels based his remarks on a recent visit to Greenville to attend the North Carolina Methodist Episcopal conference. While here he had the opportunity to see something of the progress made by the community the last several years, and to say he was impressed would be expressing the matter mildly.

Mr. Daniels has visited Greenville several times in recent years but this was the first time he stayed long enough to actually see what was being accomplished.

He was only given a first-hand impression of the magnitude of the tobacco market, but had time enough to note the progress of the Teachers college, recognized as one of the best institutions of its kind in the country, and the public school system which has the highest scholastic rating of any school in the state.

These were just a few of the many things that came to the attention of the versatile newspaperman, and he believes that Washington's reference as "the dirty little town on Tar river" is no longer deserving.

Greenville is one of the most representative towns in eastern Carolina and it has won this recognition because of a desire on the part of its people to make everybody feel at home while here. It was this desire that inspired the slogan, "Our Greenville, Yours if You Come," and which has caused so many people to take advantage of it.

LADY with a PAST

By Harriet Henry

SYNOPSIS: Venice Muir has won acclaim in New York society, after years of being considered dull, because of a fictitious, intriguing reputation which she cultivated while abroad. The one man she cares for, Drake Farrelly, believes the reputation illustrates her real character, and keeps away from her. She meets him unexpectedly.

THE MILKMAN'S SO'RG "Oh," Venice cried, "you" Her hand went to the wet strings of her hair on her cheeks and she felt her face growing hot beneath its tingling, icy surface. "My God, Venice, what have you been doing?" Drake asked. "Battling the elements. I could not get a taxi. And I fell down at the corner of Fifth avenue. I must look like a ghoul."

"You look like a crowned red fox," Drake said. "Come along. Why are you out alone on a filthy night like this?" "I've been up at Columbia. An English literature course." Her heart was thumping with the quick linking of his arm in hers. He was marching her briskly towards Park avenue. In her sudden excitement she forgot to think how ridiculous it was after all her planned encounters that she should meet him looking worse than she had probably ever looked in all her life before.

"Come in," she said at her apartment entrance. "We must have something hot. You're drenched too." "Sound's excellent. You're wet through, Venice." "But I don't run or fade and my spirit is undaunted." She suddenly felt happy and gay. They raked the fire to a roaring blaze in the living-room and Venice showed him where to find the Scotch and soda while she hurried to change her clothes. She put on a filmy, jade negligee with- out stopping to wonder whether it was proper or not. She was too excited to miss a moment of his visit.

He was sitting on the floor by the fire with a tall glass in his hand and one near by for her. She sank beside him with a little "Oo-o" of quick pleasure at the warm blaze. "Even my insides are iced," she cried, holding out her hands to the fire. "Take a quick drink. You'll get the flu or something." She gulped eagerly. "Oh, Drake, your shoes! Won't you take them off?" "Hardly the thing when calling on Miss Muir."

"But look at me." She gave a glance to her chiffons and laces and knew a sudden overwhelming embarrassment. She felt wordless and unbearably shy. "You look to me like the Venetian who broke the Marquis' heart," he laughed. It was said with no malice, just jovial badinage. Venice forgot her sudden diffidence. She looked bravely into his eyes.

"You've avoided me purposely, Drake, haven't you? Why?" He hesitated an instant. "Do you want the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth?" he asked. "Yes, please." "It's difficult." "It's more or less a case of mis-taken identity." "What do you mean?" "I—when I found you on the stairs at the Goadsby's I thought you were a sweet, shy, unhappy sort of girl. I remembered you often when you were abroad and looked forward to your coming home again. Then I ran into you

There was a long silence. She couldn't look at him somehow, turning the tall glass between her hands, her eyes on the amber liquid. "Please say something," she finally managed. "I won't mind." She suddenly heard his gay, infectious chuckle. His head was thrown back and he was laughing. He finally had to take out his handkerchief to mop his eyes. "You're a darling, he said. "What!" "Dear, silly, unhappy, humorous, little Venice Muir." "I'm not." She was almost laughing too.

"And the picture really is lovely. The brush strokes aren't superficial or the colors hackneyed. I saw it the third time in an artificial light." Drake told her. "Oh, Drake," she clasped her hands excitedly. "Let's have another drink. To you and me somehow." "You bet." "And I have time for courses at Columbia. Do you remember you said most cuttingly I wouldn't have?"

"And you said you'd see me at the Charity Ball just as cuttingly. You did see me, didn't you? Why do you suppose I went?" "To give your sister a big evening, of course." She made a little mouth. "Why did you say I was a dangerous woman as far as you were concerned, Drake?" "Because I liked you so overwhelmingly much in spite of the spicy rumors that I didn't like at all."

They eagerly touched glasses. A Borden's cart rattled in the street below. How could the clock have crept around to such an hour? The driver's whistle came up to them. Can This Be Love? "A humble milkman conveys my sentiments," exactly," laughed Drake. A piece of log dropped smouldering to the hearth. The fire had almost gone out. (Copyright, Harriet Henry) THE END.

NEWS BRIEFS

From Over The City and County

WINTER WEATHER HAS REACHED GREENVILLE Winter weather, which gripped the west several days ago, has descended upon Greenville and territory in real earnest.

The lowered temperatures were accompanied by a slight drizzle of rain last night, and this continued intermittently today. A haze hung over the entire country-side, especially in the morning, making traffic difficult and hazardous. The temperature showed an upward trend this morning with slight change being noted at the noon hour.

CURB MARKET OPENS ITS NEW HOME HERE The new home of the curb market in the old Model School building on Cotanch street, was thrown open to the public this morning and despite inclement weather, numbers of patrons were on hand to take advantage of the extensive offerings brought in by truck growers.

The location is one of the best the market has had since its establishment several years ago, and is a matter of pride to those in charge of its development. Ample parking space has been provided around the building and facilities for handling the various products are superior to the old market in many respects.

KIWANIS CLUB GIVES THANKS (Continued from Page One) Mr. Clark told of "What the Town Has to Be Thankful For." He expressed belief that the period of depression so widely lamented by the average citizen would eventually prove a blessing in the life of the community by bringing the people to a realization of their responsibility to God, the giver of all life and prosperity. He said the citizenship should not be thankful for money alone, but for the things that stand for righteousness, peace and harmony.

Mr. Hillman declared present conditions challenged the people to attempt to make their lives more in keeping with the teachings enunciated by Christ on the shores of Galilee. He said the nation had lost sight of the great principles underlying civilization in the wild scramble for the things of the world, and expressed hope that the world might be inspired to a higher plane than today. The things of the soul, he said, constituted the greatest challenge of the present decade, and the nation should inject in its thanksgiving a desire to find higher levels of life.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick entertained with two solo numbers. She was accompanied by Mrs. Ray Tyson. The usual supper and song program, under direction of C. B. Rowlett, former president of the club, who recently was transferred to Raleigh, was a guest of the club, and responded briefly to a hearty welcome.

DEMOCRATS SURE OF N. J. (Continued from Page One) Democrats 219; Republicans 214; Farmer Laborite one, and leave but one vacancy.

The election was necessitated by the death of Representative Ernest R. Ackerman, Republican, who won in 1930 by a 33,000 majority. In the recent gubernatorial election, A. Harry Moore, Democrat, won the district by more than 10,000, indicating a turn over of 43,000 votes.

Percy Stewart of Plainfield, the Democratic candidate for Ackerman's seat, was unopposed in the primary after party forces secured the withdrawal of opponents. The Republican candidate, Donald McLean of Elizabeth, was one of four primary candidates, and has had the difficult problem of harmonizing party factions.

As both candidates are anti-prohibitionists, and Ackerman was a dry, whatever the outcome the House wet bloc will be increased by one. The Democrats and wets have made big strides in the recent special elections. Only last Tuesday in a special election, Richard M. Kleberg, Democrat and modificationist, was elected in the fourth Texas district.

Out of five elections November 3, the Democrats won three, one in the Republican state of Michigan, an outright turnover. All five returned anti-prohibitionists.

To Probe Death of Cinema Actor

New York, Nov. 28.—(AP)—The film figure of Robert Ames moved and talked upon the screen of a Broadway theatre today for the entertainment of moving picture patrons, while Ames, well known actor of stage and cinema, lay dead at the morgue.

Police said, there were circumstances in connection with his death that they wished to investigate. An autopsy was ordered held today.

A maid found his body sprawled between the bedroom and bath when she entered his suite at a Park avenue hotel late yesterday. Physicians said his death was due to an internal hemorrhage resulting from a kidney ailment.

The medical examiner, however, said an autopsy would be necessary. The possibility that Ames may have taken an overdose of sleeping powders which were found in the room was suggested. Doctors said he undoubtedly was in severe pain just prior to his death.

BRITISH MILLS TO CUT WAGES

Desperate Labor War is Predicted Following Announcement of Reduction.

Manchester, Eng., Nov. 28.—(AP)—A "desperate" labor struggle was predicted in England as 250,000 textile workers today faced a decision of cotton mill owners to put into effect lower wage scales and longer working hours.

The owners decided at a meeting here last night to give the workers the required month's notice that the present agreement will be terminated. Notice given by the Master Cotton Spinners' Federation will expire on December 31. The present agreement was negotiated in 1919.

While the proposed changes were not specified, it was understood the employers intend to establish a 55-1-2 hour week instead of the present 48 hours, with wages reduced so that the workers would earn the same in the 55-1-2 hours they now earn in 48.

Henry Boothman, secretary of the Cotton Spinners' Union predicted that if the federation persisted that the whole British Trades Union movement will back the Cotton Union and a desperate struggle result. He said the proposal was "lunacy."

The British textile business has been reported booming lately, partly because of the increased business that followed suspension of the gold standard and partly because of the Chinese boycott of Japan which brought new business to English mills.

Mix Still In Bad Condition

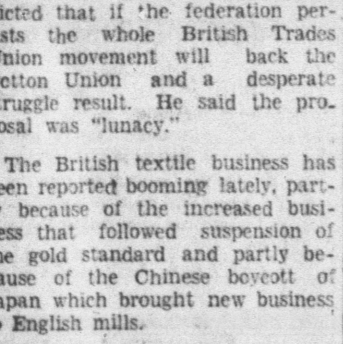

Hollywood, Nov. 28.—(AP)—His condition showing slight improvement during the last 24 hours, Tom Mix, film and circus cowboy, was still in a dangerous condition today.

"All in all, Mr. Mix is improving, but it is a bit too early for me to feel optimistic," said Dr. R. N. Smith, his physician.

Mix was operated on Monday night for a ruptured appendix. Peritonitis had developed and he was in a serious condition when the operation was performed, Dr. Smith said.

Injections of a special serum developed in the laboratories of Stanford University have been given the actor to fight the infection. Dr. Smith said the actor's strong constitution has been a great aid.

RIOT HALTS MEETING ON DISARMAMENT IN PARIS

(Continued from Page One) States were howled down. Police were called out, fists flew on several occasions before the eyes of distinguished visitors and former Premier Edouard Herriot, chairman of the meeting, banged his gavel futilely and asked: "Where is French politeness?"

A broadcast address by Senator William E. Borah was scarcely audible because of static and as soon as a translator began to read it in French boating and jeering broke loose again.

A Nationalist meeting in another hall, held in protest against the alleged "political character" of the disarmament gathering, proceeded quietly at the same time.

Former Ambassador Houghton was interrupted by a fist fight which began just below the speaker's stand as he spoke the first paragraph of his address of greeting "from the Millions of Americans united to aid in the peaceful solution of international divergencies." He was forced to sit down, unable to go farther.

Former Premier Paul Painleve was cheered when he said France could not disarm until it had an assurance of security.

As former Ambassador Houghton concluded his first sentence the crowd was quite out of hand and began a rush for the platform. Two lines of police were formed and the former ambassador, with Lord Cecil, made his exit through the guard.

"I never saw anything like it in my life," said Mr. Houghton.

Calm was restored only after the crowd had been ushered out by the police and the Marseillaise with its "March on, march on, to victory or death!" had been sung.

CHARGE DUE DEC. 1ST

(Continued from Page One) ing, mixing, blending, or processing any article of commerce, or upon the sale of such articles of commerce by anyone who engages in the business of producing, manufacturing, mixing, blending or processing, but shall apply to anyone engaged in either of these businesses, if and to the extent that, articles of commerce are bought and sold in connection with such business in which they are bought.

You will readily see from the foregoing that soda fountain receipts, receipts from prescription departments and any article that the druggist manufactures such as home-made sandwiches, cakes, pies, etc. are deductible items. Practically everything sold in cafes and restaurants will be deductible since such items are not sold in substantially the form in which they are bought. Hardware dealers are exempt on paints they sell which they themselves mix; clothing dealers and tailors will be exempt on any suits of clothes that they make to order and all dealers will be exempt on any article that they sell which is not sold to the consumer in substantially the same form in which the dealer purchased the article. If any article is manufactured by the dealer, if it is produced by the dealer, if the dealer mixes it or blends it with some other article, the sale will be exempt in reporting the gross sales. The language of the statute may be broad enough to include assembling. As to this latter phase, we have been unable to secure a ruling from the Department of Revenue and understand the department is handling all such questions as they arise, but that they are being governed in the collection of the tax by the exemptions above mentioned and deciding each case on its merits.

SHORT SELLING DEFENDED BEFORE SENATE'S INQUIRY

Chairman McNary announced the committee would meet soon to consider legislation to strengthen the board and also study the proposal for an investigation.

WASHINGTON, NOV. 28.—(AP)—

Short selling was defended before the Senate Agriculture committee today by the grain exchanges. Siebel C. Harris, chairman of the committee on national affairs of the Grain Exchange also contended that the exchanges have benefited the farmer and the agriculture department has authority to "provide fully against any abuses which might conceivably creep into the present system."

He pointed out that the exchanges themselves have committees which cooperate with the government to prevent abuses.

"To depart from the long and settled practice of short selling of grain at this time, when the amount of short selling of grain is negligible, would in the judgment of the exchanges be greatly prejudicial not only to trade but to the interests of the farmers."

"Anything which tends to curtail or eliminate the speculative market correspondingly interests with the ability of the merchant-disposer to shift his risk," the witness put it.

Senator Frazier, Republican of North Dakota, contended short selling is "pure gambling that kills the law of supply and demand and does away with a fair market."

Harris replied he did not think so, because the Grain Stabilization Corporation—armed with $50,000,000—had been unable to maintain the price and it was illogical to believe that a few individuals without any such sum could control the price.

Speculation, he said, shifts the risk from the producer to those who want to bear it.

George S. Milnor, general manager of the Farm Board's Grain Stabilization Corporation, testified yesterday he was inclined to believe that some short selling on the grain exchanges had been to discredit the board.

Sunset Pass

By ZANE GREY

SYNOPSIS: Trueman Rock returns to Wagonongue after a six-year absence to find the same sleepy town he used to fight and make love and ride in—even some very well known bullet holes still are in a wall. He expects some trouble from the sheriff, but learns that the sheriff has been slain. Since Rock left Wagonongue a new outfit, Gage Preston's, has enlarged the cattle business by introducing butchering. Ash Preston, the oldest son, is a "bad hombre" and is suspected of killing the sheriff. There is some mystery about Ash, and Rock is confidentially warned against him. Rock looks up an old friend, Sol Winters, who keeps a store, and is warmly welcomed. Winters tells Rock that his son Nick was shot off his horse, and he does not believe that it was an accident. He adds that there is some new bad blood on the range.

Chapter 2
GIRLS—PAST AND PRESENT

Here a customer entered, and Rock was left to himself. He seated himself on the counter and put aside his sombrero, to find his brow clammy and cold.

Nick Winter dead! Shot by rustlers, or perhaps by this new bad element hinted at by Clark and Winters. The last thing Rock would have expected was that anyone could do violence to gentle, kindly crippled Nick Winter. Here was something to keep Rock around Wagonongue, if nothing else offered.

Rock pictured in mind the wild range south of Wagonongue and particularly the broken Sunset Pass country with its sag fags and cedar ridges and pinched gorges and the purple timber uplands. There had never been a more beautiful wilderness known to Rock or one harder on riders, horses, and cattle.

"True, it's good to see you sittin' there," said Winters, returning. "I don't need to be told you've worked hard."

"Yes, Sol. I've been five years on a cattle job in Texas. Cleaned up ten thousand, all honest and square. How much do I owe you?"

"Owe me? Nothin'," replied Sol smiling.

"Look over your books before I hand you one," ordered Rock fiercely. Whereupon he helped Winters find the old account, which was not small, and forced him to accept payment with interest.

"Say, Rock, to be honest, this little windfall will help a lot," declared Winters, brightly. "I got in a cattle deal some time past an' lost out pretty much in debt. Then the new store—Dabb's—ate into my trade. I had to move. Lately, my business has picked up."

"That's good. Who'd you go in cattle deals with?" rejoined Rock, gruffly.

"Dabb."

"Dabb? Not John Dabb who ran things here years ago?"

"Yes, John Dabb."

"Well, Sol, you ought to have known better."

"Sure, but it seemed such a promising deal an' it was for Nick's sake—Dab! I'm out of cattle deals for good."

"What's become of my old girl, Kit Rand?" inquired Rock.

"Kit! Let me see. I know she married Chess Watkins—"

"What! That drunken loafer?" interrupted Rock.

"Yes, an' she couldn't change him either. Kitty had to go to work in a restaurant here, an' finally they left Wagonongue."

"Good Lord! . . . How about Polly Ackers?"

"Polly went to the bad," returned Sol. "Some flash gambler got around her. She's been gone for years."

Rock groaned. "I'm sorry I ever came back to this darned Wagonongue—I'll risk one more question. How about my best girl, Amy Wund?"

"Worse an' more of it, True," rejoined Winters. "After you left, Amy played fast and loose with many a puncher. There are some who say yet she never got over your runnin' away."

"Thunder! They're crazy!" burst out Rock. "She never cared for me."

"Yes, she did, if there's anything in gossip. Maybe she never found it out till you were gone. Amy was a highstrung lass. An' you know, Rock, you were sweet on Polly at the same time."

"Lord forgive me, I was."

"Boys will be boys. I reckon you didn't know your mind any better'n Amy knew hers. An' now brace yourself for a shock, True."

"Fire away."

"Amy broke the hearts of all the cowboys on the range—an' then up and married John Dabb."

Rock glared speechlessly at his friend.

"Dabb was a widowed with a daughter 'most old as Amy. They were married a year or so ago. Amy is 'not happy an' she flirts as much as ever."

"Sol, will you keep my money till I come askin' for it?" queried Rock. "Now, True, what're you up to?"

"I'm going out and get awful, terrible drunk," declared Rock, tearfully. "I'm goin' to drown my grief."

"Well, wait till I come back," returned Winters. "I've got to go to the station. My clerk is off today. Keep store for me."

"All right, I'll keep store. But you rustle back here pronto."

Winters hurried out, bareheaded and in his shirt sleeves, leaving Rock sitting on the counter. He felt the wild, unreasonable yearning to do himself wrong.

A light quick step arrested the current of Trueman's thoughts. He looked up. A girl had entered the store. His first swift sight of her caused him to slip off the counter. She looked around expectantly and seeing Rock she hesitated, then she came forward. Rock suddenly realized that to get terribly drunk was the very remotest thing that he wanted or intended to do.

"Is Mr. Winter in?" asked the girl, pausing before the counter.

"No. He had to go to the station."

"Oh—I'm sorry. I can't wait."

"Can I do anything for you?" inquired Rock. He was cool, easy, respectful.

"Are you the new clerk Mr. Winter was expecting?" she queried.

"Yes, miss, at your service."

"I've quite a list of things to get."

"I'll do my best. But I'm a little new to the business."

"That's all right. I'll help you," she returned, graciously. "Now where is that paper?"

"Here it is," she said, producing a slip of paper and looking up somewhat flushed. Her eyes were large, wide apart, gray in color. Rock looked into them. Something happened to him then that had never happened before and which could never happen again.

Pains Stopped When Lady Got Stronger

"ABOUT a year ago, my health was not good," writes Mrs. W. F. Sivley, 3800 First Court, N. Birmingham, Ala. "I felt weak, tired. I had pains in my back. I knew by these symptoms I needed something to build me up. My mother advised me to try Cardui, which I did. I found it was what I needed, for it built me up. The pain in my back stopped, and I felt better and stronger than I had in some time. I took about 7 bottles of Cardui in all."

Market Report Cotton--Stocks--Grain

N. Y. COTTON

New York, Nov. 28.—(AP)—Cotton opened barely steady today at a decline of 1 to 4 points on some southern mid continental selling which was promoted by easier Liverpool cables. January sold off to 6.95.

Ordering was light at the start and while they increased somewhat, general business remained quiet with prices sagging off to 6.01 for January and 6.35 for May, making net declines of about 3 to 6 points on the general list by the end of the first half hour. The decline here was only a partial response to the Liverpool showing.

Liverpool cable advices reported hedging and general liquidation in that market and said the business in cloth and yarn was restricted. Egyptian cotton futures in Liverpool were 25 to 48 points lower. The amount of cotton on shipboard at U. S. ports at the end of the week was estimated at 192,000 bales as against 161,000 last year.

GRAIN MARKET

Chicago, Nov. 28.—(AP)—Late rallies in grain values lifted wheat today to above yesterday's finish. In the final hour the markets met with stubborn resistance to selling pressure, active buying power developing from standing orders to purchase on downturns. Most of the recoveries were scored after trading in stocks had ended for the week. A late stimulating factor was news of a hot wave in Argentina, with temperatures of above 100, threatening serious damage to crops.

Wheat closed irregular, varying from 1-2 cent off to 1-4 gain, compared with yesterday's finish, corn unchanged to 1-8 down, oats at 1-8 decline to 1-8 advance, and provisions unchanged to 15 cents lower.

STOCK MARKET

New York, Nov. 28.—(AP)—Pressure against the securities markets moderated somewhat today, but the stubborn decline persisted, with railroad share price averages registering a new minimum since the 1920's.

Despite several bright spots in the week-end mercantile and trade reviews, the fact that acceleration of activity in the automobile industry, with consequent stimulus to steel, has been more tardy than expected, appeared to cast a dark shadow, so far as speculative sentiment was concerned.
