ABOUT TOWN

John N. Garner of Texas charges the Hoover administration with being at sea regarding the actual condition of the federal treasury or attempting to conceal it from the public.

It was rather a bold statement to make, but Garner is a bold man from a bold state, and when he gets on the warpath nobody knows what he is going to say next.

President Hoover apparently only realized the awful condition of the treasury the last year or so and tried to take steps to improve the condition even in the face of recommending millions for the benefit of large corporations.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, making money available to railroads and every other big industry of the country, was conceived in the President's brain at a time when the national treasury was appallingly short.

Franklin D. Roosevelt is going to win by an overwhelming majority in the next election, it is believed by men high in the political life of the state, and others too, who have watched developments the last several months.

Never before probably in the history of the government has any presidential candidate attained popularity as quickly as Roosevelt.

States which in previous years were known for their moss-back adherence to the Republican principles are lining up in the Roosevelt column because they are tired of the administration's way of doing things.

It takes American people a long time to get started, but when they get to going, something is going to happen. It has happened to many high officials in the past and it is evident the President is destined to get a taste of it in November.

The coming of Attorney General Dennis G. Brummitt to Grimesland October 27 will be received with interest by the people of the community as well as in other sections where he is well known and greatly admired.

Mr. Brummitt spoke here some time ago on the subject of "The Constitution" and the things he said about the condition of the country was received with rapt attention by his audience.

Many prominent men are due to come to Pitt county between now and November to have their say for the Democratic party and the information which they will impart should play its part in determining the stand of those now on the fence and unable to get off.

Brummitt is a forceful speaker, fully familiar with conditions in this country, and Grimesland is fortunate in being able to obtain the services of such a distinguished leader as its campaign speaker.

Warnings against diphtheria have been issued by the local health department and it is hoped the public will do everything to comply with them.

While no epidemic has been reported, several cases have been registered in the county recently, and the health department is hopeful people will take every precaution to guard against the disease.

The warning applied particularly to parents with children in school. Children suffering from sore throat should not be permitted to attend school until their condition has been determined, the health officer said, because hundreds of other children would be exposed if the sick child goes to school.

The department is doing everything possible to cope with the situation and if the people will do their bit, the disease can be easily

A PATH TO PARADISE

Chapter 1

THE DON'T CARE GIRL. Clive had made up his mind. Precisely what he was going to tell her depended on his reception. If she drove him to extremities, he would propose. But to become engaged before his prospects were brighter didn't strike him as honest.

Some of this he had tried to write, but had torn up the letters. Letters said too much. Practically what his had said was: "I adore you and don't approve of you." Not to approve of anyone implied distrust.

That afternoon he had taken the first step by phoning her. "First step, Santa? Are you free this evening?"

"Sorry. I wish you'd called sooner." "But see here—this is something that can't wait."

expecting me. She'll be back directly." Goff ushered him into the library and placed cigarettes at his elbow. Clive's feeling that he was an intruder grew. The well-bred silence of the house rebuked him.

"I'm afraid Miss Santa may be late, sir. You know what she is, if I may say so, when she gets going. After nine I'm off duty. Is there anything I can do for you?"

"As minutes ticked by he wondered how many suitors' humiliation this room had witnessed. Probably absence was her method of refusing."

His indignation mounted. She'd played him fast and loose. Rising, he was halted by an array of silver-framed photographs. There she was the focus of his universe, gentle, remote, alluring—as a baby, school-girl, debutante. Strange how she she prompted. "Yes. But it's late." "I'll stay up with you if it takes till morning," she coaxed him. "Well, it's this. Do you like me?" "Don't be foolish."

"In love with me?" She wriggled as though he'd knocked her funny-bone. "It's so difficult to be certain." "Then you can't be. No woman can be in love with more than one man at the same time."

"You've never been a woman." "Well, here's what I mean. No woman has a right to be in love with more than one man at the same time."

"Who's to forbid her?" Clive leaned forward. "The man who worships her. Supposing I did to you what you've done to me this evening?"

"I'd be furious." "Then why should you be privileged to do it to me?" She flashed up her face, thrusting her lips closer.

"Fraid it'll have to." "But see here," his tone had ceased to be casual. "If I don't, say now, I may never."

"Then say it." "Can't cross the wire." A pause. "You were with me till midnight. Why didn't you say it then?"

"I know. But I've been thinking. I've reached a sort of crisis. Don't hang up. This date you've made—can't you shelve it?" A longer pause. "I might. Tell you what—be at my house by eight-thirty. If I am not at home, wait for me."

"But you will be?" "Listen. Her voice had caressed him. "That's a kiss. It's for you." Had any other girl done that it would have meant a lot.

Her name was all wrong. That was where the mischief had started. Whoever heard of christening a she-American baby Santa? A Spanish nurse had been responsible. Strange—misjudging the latent propensities of her charge, she had addressed her as "My Saint."

The endearment had been made permanent by baptism. The family name of Dawn had been sufficiently fantastic. When Santa was added, a flavor of quite unnecessary romance had been imported.

In a worried mood Clive set out to keep the appointment. It was an April evening—blue sky, white banks of clouds. He travelled by the Hudson Tube to Park Place, Newark, and from there hired a taxi. After the pavements of New York, flowering shrubs on green lawns impressed him as rural.

Tense with emotion, he struck the tree-bordered avenue in which the Dawns' town house stood. Glancing at the windows he leapt out. A curtain moved. He was certain she was behind it. He made a wager with himself as he paid the taxi.

"If she's postponed the other fellow, I'll propose to her." The butler opened the door. Miss Santa was away. Two young gentlemen in an automobile had called for her. Mr. and Mrs. Dawn were at the theater. The informant implied: "On your way, little one. There's nothing to detain you."

"That's all right, Goff." Clive insisted on entering. "Miss Santa's controlled."

The federal work funds appropriated to this county will do much toward relieving the condition arising from unemployment during the winter months.

It is impossible to say how serious the condition in this county will be, but welfare workers believe they will be able to obtain sufficient money to take care of the situation.

Allotments to the various counties are based on needs and not population and this assures communities suffering acutely from unemployment sufficient help to care for their condition.

never lost that angelic look. She seemed to appeal to him to believe in her. At half-past eleven, when he had lost count of time, a key turning in the latch raised his hopes. Voices. He recognized her mother's.

"If she was in first, she was to scribble a note. Must be in the library; it's lit up like a lantern." A golden-headed woman, finely featured and Europeanized, parted the curtains. "O, it's you!"

"Santa asked me to wait," Clive excused his presence. "How long have you been waiting?" Clive grinned. "Not more than three hours."

"Three hours, did you say?" Mr. Dawn, athletic and fortyish, appeared behind his wife. "That's mighty mean of her. When did you make the appointment?"

"She's so young," Mrs. Dawn spoke conciliatingly. "But to drag Clive from New York for nothing!"

"We'll tell her you were here," Her mother stifled a yawn. "Offer him a bed, Judy," Mr. Dawn suggested.

The situation called for action. Clive was being given the chance of leaving or being smuggled into a bedroom. In either event he would miss his interview with Santa.

"Don't worry about me," he affected cheerfulness. "I only want a word with her. Won't take a minute. I'm accustomed to late hours."

Mr. Dawn turned away. "Don't know how you night-hawks stand it."

Mrs. Dawn remained rooted. "I would rather you left, Clive. Santa needs rest."

"I won't tire her," he promised. "But how about yourself? You won't be fit for anything in the morning."

"I feel fresh as paint." "A good deal fresher," Mrs. Dawn told her husband as she undressed. "I don't blame the boy." Dawn stuck to his defence. "Santa treats al her beaux abominably and you encourage her."

In the library Clive's long visit had become a vigil. It was past one when an automobile halted against the pavement. He raised a corner of the blind. The youngster at the wheel was calling: "So long, baby."

areoled angel the next. That she was being misled when she attributed to every admirer her own inconstancy. Her mission was to be sacred. His mission was to be inspired. Their joint mission was to draw the blinds and concentrate.

"But old sooper-sides," she protested. "be sensible. How can I tell whether I prefer you till I've sampled?"

That was the last straw. As though the devil were behind him, he rushed into the hall and seized his hat.

"Till you've finished sampling, count me out," he pronounced his verdict. Next morning Mrs. Dawn tackled her daughter.

"What happened between you and Clive?" "I'm not sure, Mummy. I think he tried to propose."

"Did you say yes?" "I'm not sure, Mummy." "In that case you will. There's no time to be lost. We'll sail for Europe. Not a word to your father of the reason."

"Offer him a bed, Judy," Mr. Dawn suggested. (Copyright 1931-1932, Coningsby Dawson)

Clive gets a telegram, tomorrow, that sends his heart into his throat.

A Washington Daybook

By HERBERT PLUMMER

Washington, Oct. 15. — (AP) — Once more Democrats and Republicans "on the hill" find themselves wondering what a farmer-laborite will do as the closing session of the 72nd Congress nears.

It was during those few weeks preceding the first session of the present Congress a year ago that young Paul Kvale had house leaders on the anxious seat.

So close was the political division in the House after the congressional elections that Kvale at one time had the say as to who would control the organization.

Now, in the Senate Henrik Shipstead has been maneuvered into much the same strategic position.

The death of Senator Waterman of Colorado has made the count in the Senate 47 Republicans, 47 Democrats and Senator Shipstead.

Colorado has a senator-designate who is a Democrat, but he must stand for election in November for the right to sit for the short session.

Were the Democrat successful in Colorado, Senator Shipstead would hold the whip hand over the Senate provided no other vacancies occurred. By voting with the Democrats he could swing control to them a clear majority of 49 votes being necessary to effect the change.

However, if he votes with the Republicans, as he has done in the past, there will be a tie and the Republicans will keep control.

The results of the elections on November 8 might do a lot to help Shipstead make up his mind as to how he would cast his vote. A Democratic presidential victory might be a powerful argument for him to go along with the Democrats instead of the Republicans.

With a Democratic House assured for the short session, were the Minnesota senator to make Democratic control of the Senate possible, that party could, if it so desired, start in immediately upon its program.

Legion to Meet Ayden Tuesday

Ayden members of the Pitt County Post of the American Legion will entertain the Post at Ayden Tuesday evening at 7 o'clock.

Outstanding features of the meeting will be installation of officers and discussion of plans for Armistice Day exercises. J. C. Lanier, of Greenville, will be inducted into office as commander, succeeding Charlie Martin, of Ayden.

All ex-service men have been given a cordial invitation to attend the session.

VAUDEVILLE FEATURED AT STATE WEDNESDAY

"Scanda's of Reno", a twenty-five vaudeville show, will be on the bill at the State Wednesday, appearing on the stage at both matinee and evening performances, in addition to the regular screen program.

The show runs forty minutes, and is clever in every respect, having two feature comedians, Candler & Candler, who offer lines of uproarious chatter to keep you roaring; a chorus of eight dazzling beauties, singing, dancing, many specialty numbers, together with Billy Mack and his Night Club Revelers, a snappy orchestra.

SUNDOWN STORIES

THE SURPRISE

Flotilla Botilla was feeling much better. She was sitting on the front porch of her house when suddenly deny there came a great noise.

It had been so quiet around Puddle Muddle since she had been ill.

Now from all the trees around, birds began to sing as though their little, feathered, throats would burst. And, up the road, leading to Flotilla Botilla's house, came all her friends.

First came Willy Nilly, with Rip beside him. Willy Nilly took enormous strides with his long legs, and he was carrying a little basket he had made out of a peach stone for Flotilla to wear at the end of her string of beads.

Next came Mr. and Mrs. Quacko Duck, slowly driving the one-and-a-half-inch Duck coupe, with all the little Ducks sitting on all parts of the car, quack-quacking for all they were worth, while Mrs. Quacko quonk-knocked the horn wad and excitedly.

Then came Old Toad, Mother Toad, Toodles and the others, hopping over each other to get to Flotilla as quickly as they could.

They had made a wreath of pond lilies to fasten around her neck.

To the end of the procession came Top-Notch, the Rooster, crowing "Cock-a-doodle-do," and carrying under his right wing a walking-stick he had made for Flotilla by pulling leaves off a round twig.

As they drew near they stopped and cried, in their speaking, barking, quacking, croaking, crowing voices:

"Hurrah that you're well. Never get sick again. Our feathers shook with fear, but now they flutter with happiness!"

"The Puddle Jumper"

M. G. Mann, secretary and treasurer of the North Carolina Cotton Co-operative Association, will be the principal speaker at a meeting of farmers of Pitt County to be held in the courthouse at Greenville, Wednesday morning, at 10:30 o'clock.

Mr. Mann will discuss the seed loan cotton and how it is to be handled to collateralize government loans at the 9 1-2 cents per pound basis. All seed loan borrowers should attend this meeting and get the full details as to just how this cotton is being handled. There seems to be some misunderstanding among the farmers as to how this cotton is being taken in, at 9 1-2 cents per pound, and those who have already delivered cotton to their loans and those who expect to deliver should attend the meeting and find out how they can take advantage of this liberal policy extended by the Seed Loan Office.

Other farmers, business and professional men, are urged to attend this meeting as a general discussion of the present cotton situation will be given. All members of the Cotton Co-operative Association are urged to attend this meeting and find out what their organization is doing in the way of handling the present crop and other cotton that they are carrying.

Nothing Venture

By PATRICIA WENTWORTH

SYNOPSIS: About to meet death with her husband, Jervis Weare, in the rising tide, Nan finds the key to his prison where Robert Leonard had dropped it. Released, they creep up the passage out of reach of the water, only to find the trap door closed. They are blocked—with freedom in sight.

Chapter 49

"BRAN FOUND YOU"

Rosamund stood just inside Robert Leonard's door, waiting. She had been half an hour covering the few hundred yards between the Tetterly house and where she stood.

"Bad night for travel," she said, looking at a half packed suitcase on a chair.

"Best for both of us. You'll finish us coming here like this. I'm off before you fit a rope around my neck."

"That's not the chief reason. Where's Jervis?"

"You'll have to dive to find him." Rosamund stood quite still for a moment, then ran for the door. She was flung aside.

"How dare you!"

"You're not going down; the water's well up to the roof by now!"

Rosamund calmly walked to the telephone and lifted the receiver.

"Give me Croyston police station."

She covered the mouthpiece. "Am I going down?" She looked into the mouth of Leonard's automatic; her eyes were steady.

"I'm worth something alive," she said coolly.

"Don't bluff me!"

A thrumming came from the instrument.

"That's was bluff," she admitted. "But the operator's here now. She can hear shooting, too."

Robert Leonard flung his pistol down on the table.

"Hang up that damned receiver!" he said.

Rosamund hung it up.

"Now look here—I'll tell you the whole red-hot truth. I wasn't to know you were liable to get a crazy tide when there was a storm—was I? I did my best. I went down into that damn passage and found the whole place under water. I went in up to my neck—I couldn't do more than that. I suppose you didn't expect me to drown myself?"

"No," said Rosamund—just the one word, hard and cold. Then she put out her hand. "Give me the key—I'm going down."

"Not much!"

She struck him a stinging blow in the face, and at the same moment there came the sound of loud and heavy knocking upon the back door.

"Who is it?" said Rosamund suddenly. The fight had gone out of her.

"I don't know. They mustn't see you."

Leonard opened the door and stepped out into the passage; and as he did so, the wind blew in through the kitchen, and along with it came Bran, and separated from him by a short length of chain, Ferdinand Francis. They seemed to be in a hurry.

Robert Leonard shut the door sharply behind him. He thought regretfully of the automatic on the office table.

Bran pulled on his chain, growling, and Ferdinand said:

"We're calling for Mrs. Weare."

"I don't understand. It's Mr. Francis, isn't it?"

"Where is she?" said Ferdinand sharply.

"I haven't the slightest idea what you're talking about."

"You'd better have! I got back from a wild goose chase an hour ago, and I found a note from Nan to say she was coming here to find Jervis."

"I really don't know what you're talking about, Mr. Francis."

Ferdinand lengthened the chain, and as Leonard jumped back, the great dog ran snuffing up the passage. He pushed whining against the door Nan had stood behind. Ferdinand with a quick movement flung open the other door, and was taken completely aback. Rosamund Carew was leaning on the study table in an attitude of careless indifference. Ferdinand pulled Bran's chain in his surprise.

"Isn't this a very early visit?" said

Rosamund. "Hullo, Bran!"

The dog wrinkled his brows, snuffed the air, and backed away from her outstretched hand.

"Where's Nan?" said Ferdinand. "Well—not here."

"She said she was coming here," Ferdinand began; and then he saw Leonard's pistol lying where he had thrown it. He pocketed it, then turned to see Bran with his nose to the ground.

"Seek her, boy—seek her!" he said, and followed back to the kitchen, and across the kitchen to a door behind the dresser where Bran scratched and whined.

As they went down the steps into the cellar, Robert Leonard let himself out of the front door. He had to crawl thirty yards to reach the shelter of the garage.

Bran was snuffing and scraping at the trap. Ferdinand began to roll the barrel away, and as he did so, there came a knocking on the under side of the trap.

Rosamund stood where she was, and saw the barrel and the shadow of the barrel move together. She saw Ferdinand take hold of the ring that had been under the barrel and heave. She saw the trap rise, and Bran's great head thrust forward. He whined frantically. And then she saw Jervis coming up out of the trap, and her heart stood still and her bones turned to water. A drowned man might look like that. He came up higher, and she saw Nan's face against his shoulder, and her lips a little parted.

Jervis took a step forward and then stopped, and there was a sudden dead silence.

Then Nan opened her eyes. Her gaze passed Rosamund and rested on Ferdinand.

"Did you—find us?"

"Bran found you."

"Where's Leonard?" said Jervis harshly.

He and Ferdinand ran through the empty house, out into the raw, stormy dawn. They saw Leonard's car laboring toward the cliff road. They saw it lurch, swing across the road, the irresistible gale behind it.

A huge gust caught it like a chip. It dropped over the edge into the sea.

"Let's go back to Nan, F. F.," said Jervis.

Hints to The Farmers

(Stokes Voc. Agricultural Dept.)
Curing and Storing Potatoes
 The following rules should be observed during the curing and storage period in the operation of the sweet potato curing house:

1. Maintain a temperature of 80 to 90 degrees during the curing period—ten to fourteen days.
2. Give thorough ventilation during the day but do not allow the temperature to fluctuate.
3. Close the floor ventilators at night, if danger of frost.
4. In severe weather, close all ventilators in floor and roof.
5. Examine the house during the curing period each morning, noon and night.
6. When the curing period is over (the roots indicating slight sprouting or purplish blue spot at the bud) gradually reduce the temperature by discontinuing the fires, to 55 or 60 degrees.
7. Once each day, if the weather conditions permit, open the ventilators and outside doors and windows, but close them completely early each afternoon.
8. During wet weather if moisture forms on the glass of the interior door and window, and the house appears damp, open the ventilators and keep a slow fire until all dampness has been driven out.
9. Have a regular time, preferably the middle of the day, to remove potatoes from the house, and do not return the potatoes once removed or handled, and let one person be responsible for and entirely in charge of the house.
10. After the house has been opened for making shipment, all ways dry out by starting a slow fire with all vents open.

Question: How can I keep bugs out of dried peas during the winter?

One of the best methods of keeping bugs out of peas, if the peas are to be used for seed, is to store them in air slaked lime using one pound of lime to two pounds of peas. For larger quantities one bushel of lime to each four bushels of peas should be used. For eating purposes the peas may be heated to 135 degrees for three or four hours and then stored away in paper bags.

Bermuda grass, or joint grass may be destroyed by plowing rather shallow in the fall when dry and harrowing several times so as to drag out as nearly all of the roots as possible. Burn or put them in gullies or pastures. Follow with a cleanly cultivated crop in the spring. Repeat for a few years, and it may be largely cleaned up.

The Stokes community is becoming interested in the Grange and steps are being taken to get a Grange organization started in the community. Every community in the county should have an organized group of people working together for the betterment of the community, county and state. The Grange offers an opportunity for organized effort to bring about better living conditions.

CONTEST WORKERS ENTER LAST HALF OF CAMPAIGN

 credits during the latter half of the drive is to reward those who entered their name early in the race, and to make it inconvenient for candidates to hold back subscriptions. From September 19th, the opening day of the campaign on to last Saturday, October 15th, each six months subscription received credit for 800 votes. A year's renewal or new order 2,000 votes and so on down the list. But now with the decrease in effect a six months subscription earns but 600 in contrast with the usual 800 credits and a year 1,600 in place of the 2,000.

Fourteen Active Workers.
 In checking over the work done during the first four weeks of the drive the records show fourteen candidates in all who have made a return. This number represents but a small percentage of those who took receipt books and signified their intention of taking an active part for the awards of $600-$800-$150-$100 and $50 that will be distributed at the close, Nov. 12th.

But the following seem to be all who are willing to put forth the effort required to win: Mrs. W. W. Phelps, Miss Grace Gaston, Miss Lill Wilson, Mrs. Richard Williams, Miss Mary James Lipscomb, Mrs. R. C. Abee, Mrs. F. J. Diener and Miss Blanche Staton of Greenville. Entrants from outside of Greenville include Miss Charlotte Tyson of Route 6; Miss Edna Foust Harris of Farmville; Mrs. C. B. Williams of Winterville; Mrs. Guy Sutton also of Route 6; Miss Virginia Turnage, Ayden; and Miss Mary Lee Elks, Grimesland.

RÉPORT NEW FIRE TOWER

 and Development has estimated that about 125 such towers will be needed in its primary State detection system and only twenty-seven have been provided since the program was launched.

Among the additions in the last two years were towers at Naxkina, in Columbus County; Sassafras Mountain, in Transylvania County; Corbin Mountain, in Henderson County; Edgewood, in Edgecombe County; and Warren, in Warren County. The Sassafras and Corbin Mountain towers are near the South Carolina border and were erected in cooperation with the South Carolina forest service.

Plans for forest fire protection in North Carolina, Flory said, would bring all the larger bodies of forest lands in the State within range of view of a tower. With some 7,000,000 acres of forest land now under protection in North Carolina, it is estimated at least nineteen additional towers are needed to cover the area adequately.

 not regain consciousness until Saturday. It was at first thought he had suffered a fractured skull, but this idea was abandoned upon more complete examination when consciousness returned.

In view of the fact that it is against the law not to stop when a school bus is taking on or discharging passengers, it was expected drastic action would be taken against Smith, who was reported to have made no effort to stop his machine when he saw the bus standing in the road.

The report of the accident was not made to the Department of Education until Saturday, but an investigation was immediately started by the highway patrol working in conjunction with the sheriff's department.

 lus Smith and Frank Wilson. There will be some ten or fifteen cars moved from Pitt county this winter.

Warning.
 In all likelihood there will be a killing frost at this time and potato growers should make a special effort to remove the vines from their potatoes immediately following killing frost. If allowed to remain there until it rains, a large percentage of the potatoes will not keep.

Board of Agriculture.
 The Pitt County Board of Agriculture will hold its annual farmers supper at the Rotary Club building at 7 p. m. Oct. 21. Farmers who wish to attend this supper should make reservations with the county farm agent. There will be a charge of 40c per plate. It is an open meeting of farm men and women and all will be welcome but it is necessary that they make reservations in order that preparations may be made for the proper number of plate to be served. In addition to submitting a plan of work for 1933 for the approval of the farmers of the county, it is planned to have a speaker discuss the National Grange and to arrange for the organization of such units of the Grange if the farmers may desire. It is also planned to have B. Troy Ferguson, district agent, be present at this meeting and talk to the farmers.

YOUNG FOLKS END MEETING
 Bracy and a picnic at Bonnie Doone near Fayetteville were enjoyed by the young people. At the latter there was held a Camp Leach session when around a glowing campfire the camp songs were sung and talks were made by some of the young people on the meaning of Camp Leach.

One of the features of the convention's work on Saturday was the group conference for the young people led by outstanding leaders in young people's work. The Rev. Tom Wright of Chapel Hill, conducted a conference on "Choosing Life's Work"; Mrs. Frank Challen of New Bern, led another on "Youth and Recreation"; and Mr. Rhem of Fayetteville, still another on "Service and Unselfishness."

On Saturday night, a pageant of the "Good Samaritan" was presented to the convention by the young people of all the Wilmington churches. Following this, bishop

Seeks To Halt Taking Off Of Trains in N. C.

Washington, Oct. 17.—(AP)—Examiner Thomas F. Sullivan today recommended to the Interstate Commerce Commission that it refuse to permit the Norfolk and Western Railroad to discontinue its branch in North Carolina. The Norfolk and Western asked to abandon its line between West Jefferson and Elkin when traffic fell off and business conditions no longer justified operation of the trains.

The abandonment was presented to the Corporation Commission by local interests but testimony was not given.

New York Cotton

New York, Oct. 17.—(AP)—Cotton market opened lower today caused by hedge selling. There was a moderate demand promoted by heavy rain. The December contract sold off to 6.31 by the end of the first half hour with the general list showing net loss of 8 to 9 points. Buying was supplied on rallies of from 2 to 5 points from the lowest, however, and the market at midday was quiet at a net decline of 7 to 8 points. December he ld around 6.35.

Stock Market

New York, Oct. 17.—(AP)—The stock market was a lifeless affair today with prices inclined to some heaviness but trading was slow and professional.

The list closed off one to two points during the first hour, recovered most of the losses in the second hour, and drifted lower in the third.

Steadier tone developed in wheat which may have tended to bolster prices a little. Losses of a point or so were numerous in the early decline with a few issues down a point or so, including American Telephone, Union Pacific and others. After recovering the list again drifted off but remained over losses of the morning.

The late tone was steady and the turnover was only 800,000 shares.

TAR HEELS PRAISED FOR HOLDING GA.

Chapel Hill, N. C., Oct. 17.—Home from its Georgia invasion and ready to settle down to a week's hard drilling for the big Homecoming Day game with Georgia Tech here Saturday, the Carolina football army is receiving the unstinted praise and plaudits of a hero-loving college town.

Unsatisfactory as the games generally are to victory-hungry supporters, University students, faculty and town backers thought Carolina played a fine game to play a 6 to 6 tie with Georgia brigade that had scored 25 points on Tulane the week-end before.

And they didn't fail to express themselves. More than a thousand packed Memorial Hall for the grid-iron Saturday. They went wild when Barclay and Burnett recovered fumbles deep in Georgia territory and when Kahn blocked and recovered a Georgia punt, and they almost lifted the top off the house when Lassiter came in and made the long run with Phipps' pass for the tieing touchdown.

And when it was all over they said: "That's out start. Bring on Georgia Tech, and from now on, watch our smoke."

Georgia Tech also played a fine game Saturday, holding to 6 to 0 the brilliant and speedy Auburn team that beat Duke 18 to 7 and ran wild on Birmingham-Southern and Erskine.

But these Tar Heels don't care. They expect Tech to bring one of the best teams to Chapel Hill that Kenan Stadium will see this year, and they know how McArthur, Barron, Hart, Cherry and Galloway can run the ball behind those star linemen, Neblett, Goldsmith, Ezell and Slocum.

They may even figure Tech the favorite on paper, but they also know that Carolina always plays one of its best games against Tech, and they also figure that Carolina coordinated its attack and got the necessary self-confidence when it tied the Georgia power-house that scored 25 points on Tulane.

Carolina figures that its offense will click much better on a dry field next Saturday, and the Tar Heels are thinking that Hanes Lassiter may have developed into the climax runner they needed. It was he who went in on the plays on which Carolina scored against both Tennessee and Georgia. The Tar Heels are also mighty proud of the fine work of Smith, Underwood, Barclay, Kahn, Walker and all the rest of the Tar Heel linemen, and they think they'll stop Tech just like Georgia.

Bound to be the sensation of her flaming career!
