Carideo And Conzelman Hit It Off With Missouri Fans

St. Louis, Mo., Dec. 22.—(AP)—Despite frequent reverses, two Missouri football coaches serving their first season at major institutions—Frank Carideo and Jimmy Conzelman—have come through with flying colors.

At the University of Missouri young Carideo, All-America quarterback at Notre Dame a few seasons ago, handicapped by lack of time to install a new style of play, nevertheless put a fighting squad on the field in late games.

At Washington University, Conzelman, an alumnus who was once a professional player and coach, reversed the school's gridiron fortunes and inspired team spirit so amazingly that there was talk in the athletic council of "making Conzelman an institution at Washington."

Neither Carideo nor Conzelman had much of a year so far as games won was concerned. Conzelman came off best, thanks to Washington's victory over Missouri in a game featured by the Tigers' ability to make first downs and inability to score.

Give Carideo Credit
Despite the reverses, Carideo and Conzelman have shown that they are capable of making a team out of a group of players who were considered second-rate.

A tie with Iowa State and a victory over Oklahoma represented the Tigers' net accomplishments in the Big Six conference.

Nevertheless the alumni, whose dissatisfaction was the main reason for the departure of Gwin Henry from Missouri, seem not at all displeased by the showing.

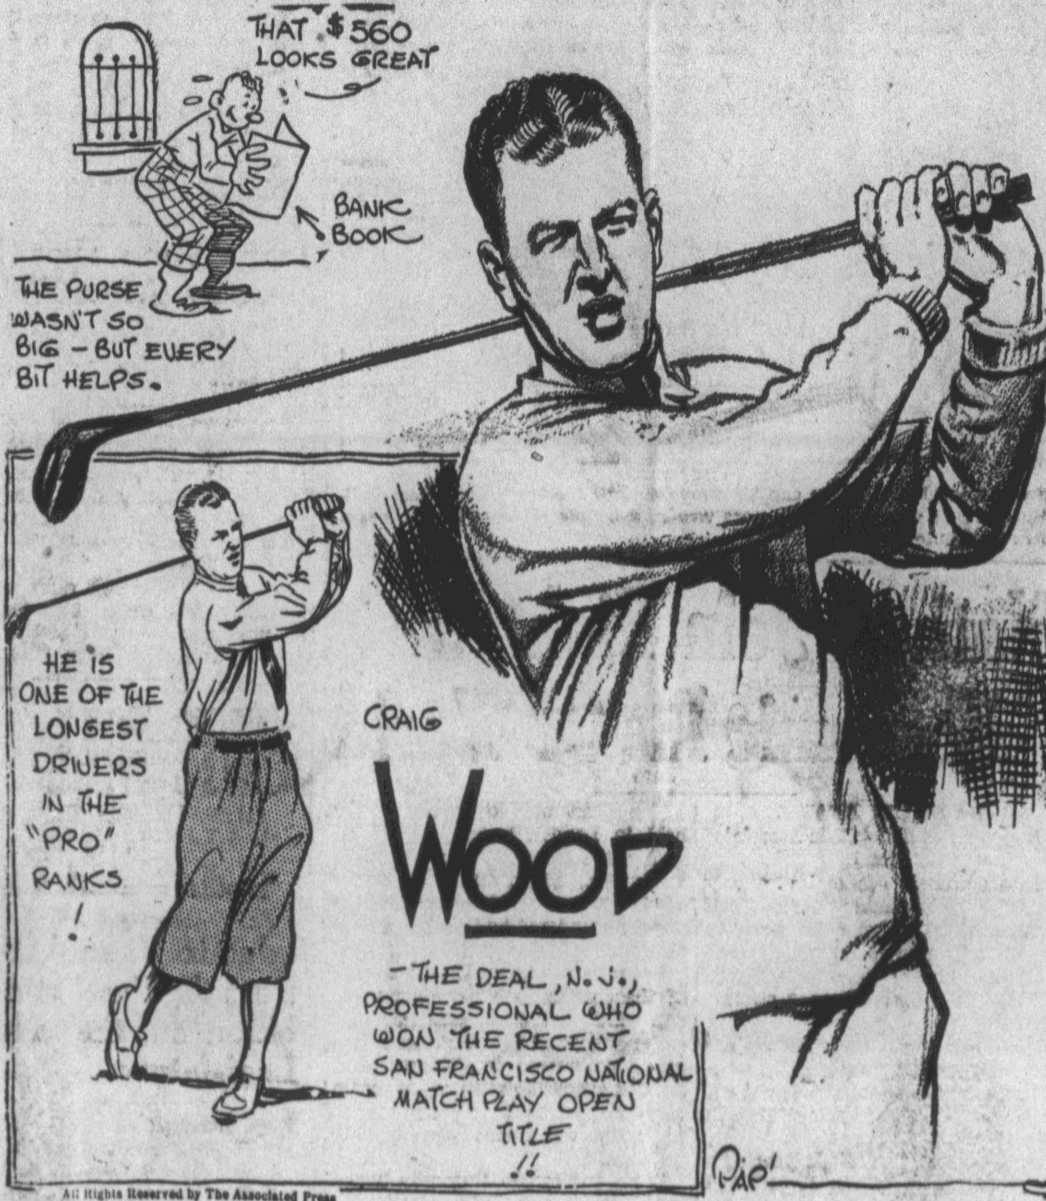

The disposition on the campus, as well as in sports circles elsewhere, appears to be to give Carideo credit for turning out a creditable eleven during the season, while injecting new life into athletics at the school. Attendance at home games increased 20 per cent over last season.

Indications are that Carideo will be retained at least another year.

It's Permanent
Conzelman, at Washington, finds himself in the enviable position of a man with a job which he can have as long as he wants it. His team, defeating Grinnell and losing to Drake and Creighton, the latter by a 40 to 0 score, was still so much better than recent Washington squads that it was rated "the best in years."

"Conzelman has come to stay," said Dr. Frank W. Ewerhart, chairman of the university's athletic council.

"We are satisfied with his work and we sincerely desire that he should remain with us permanently."

TWO COAST MENTORS SOON WILL HAVE SONS ON SQUAD

Coach Howard Jones of the Trojans looks proud of his son, Clark, who in a few more years will be fighting for a place on his father's team. The boy is a little light, but so was his father when he starred at Yale.

Los Angeles, Calif., Dec. 24.—(AP)—Some of these days—and they are not very far off either—two of California's great football coaches are going to be confronted with the problem of mixing paternal matters with the grid game.

Next fall William Spaulding, Jr., is going to be a quarterback on the University of California at Los Angeles freshman squad, and before two seasons have passed, he will be out to make the varsity under the guidance of his father, Coach Bill Spaulding.

At Black Fox Military Institute, Hollywood, is a 135-pound end named Clark Jones. He is the son of Howard Harding Jones, coach at the University of Southern California, a former Yale end.

Clark has two more years at Black Fox and one season of servitude on the Trojan freshman team before he can play under his father, which is his ambition.

Spaulding was one of the greatest backs in the history of Wabash College Indiana. He has seen his son play only once, but admits to everyone but William, Jr., that he looks to be as good as his old man.

Clark Jones is a little light for football yet, but hopes to fill out. For that matter, his father was no giant when he played at Yale.

ABOUT TOWN

With flu raging in many sections of the country people should be careful and take every precaution possible against the malady. Some sections of the states have been forced to close their schools because of epidemics, but this has not yet become necessary in this country although many cases of flu have been reported from various sections.

By paying attention to slight colds people should be able to prevent an attack of the flu which although not serious at this time may go into something serious.

The bartering of goods between Russia and Canada is getting back to the most primitive form of exchanging goods and while people had rather have money for their products, the swapping of necessities until conditions improve should be viewed with interest by individuals as well as nations.

While production makes it so that nobody cares about exchange of goods, the dire necessity stalking over many parts of the world at this time has changed the moods of peoples of different races and they are willing to do anything to keep the wolf away from their doors until conditions improve. Bartering may sound old, and it is old, but it is much better than doing without the things we actually need and haven't the money to obtain. Canada and Russia have set the pace and who doubts but other nations may follow.

The county school system will begin the last half of its session next Monday, and indications are that progress will continue in spite of decreased appropriations. The schools made splendid progress during the first half of the year. This pertained to no single institution but to all alike, and if the past may be taken as index of the future, the year will be quite successful in spite of financial handicaps.

The Board of Education is to be congratulated upon the progress so far made. With continued cooperation of men and women who support the system, the promise of a brilliant showing is better than it has been in years.

Before the next edition of this paper we will have entered the new year, and we wish to take this opportunity to express to our many readers our best wishes for a bright and happy new year.

True things look kind of blue and depressed at this time, but who knows what the year will hold forth. There is a bright spot in every cloud and in view of the fact that the present cloud has continued for so long, it would not be a surprise to see it dissipate at any time.

If we are to take the word of financial and business leaders of the nation the coming year will be much better than this year. This is already given strength by the resumption of operation of industrial plants throughout the nation, and this is expected to show a pronounced increase by the end of the year.

Buying Barbara

SYNOPSIS: Farrell Armitage flings himself into preparations to change the cruel, crippled Mark Lodely into a well man and a successful artist. Farrell has fallen in love with Mark's fiancée, Barbara Quentin, and has persuaded her to give him a year to win her. As yet the only bond between them, besides their compact, is the knowledge that before Mark gave Barbara a handsome mounted emerald pendant, he had given the same jewel to Lella Cane. More, he had painted Lella's portrait. It was the painting that had given away Mark and Lella's secret.

Chapter 18

MARK IN A TANTRUM

"Mark, you'll kindly let me in," commanded Mrs. Lodely. Her untidy bulk was planted outside her son's door and her loud voice held every indication of authority. But she did not look as though she expected to be obeyed. When the door remained contemptuously shut, she changed to a whine.

"Mark, it's not fair of you to go behaving like this! It's not fair to me and it's not fair to Bab. She'll be here directly—last thing she'd be round as usual. She'll talk about Thursday, the wedding and one thing and another, and you can't expect me to be the one to tell her you've postponed it again."

"Be quiet," requested Mark's voice, so close to the key-hole that she gasped, startled. "And go away."

She stood with her foolish mouth gaping. Then her heart-beats slowed and she made off down the stairs. Not till she reached the bottom did she reflect that it was beyond all reason to be frightened. What was Mark, after all, but her own child? He ought to be ashamed—

"But she did not go up to that closed door again. She was pottering about in the ill-lit hall, muttering to herself, when there was a step on the porch. She lunged forward, knocking the umbrella-stand out of its niche, and opened the door to Barbara.

"How is Mark?" It was the first question asked by anyone who came to Kings Barn. Invariably, Mrs. Lodely replied, in the vernacular of her youth—"Oh, none so dusty!" To Barbara Quentin, however, she said it with a difference. There was an evasion in it.

"He's had a bad day?" Barbara's hands went motionless amongst the fastenings.

"My dear girl, I haven't seen him since you have. After you'd gone off with Farrell Armitage last night, I found the door shut and you know well enough no power on earth'll make Mark open a door if he don't want to! And this mornin' he lay low—without so much as a cup of coffee—and this afternoon, I had to run out to make excuses for him at the bank and do some shopping, although I swear he went out somewhere after I'd gone, by the time I was back he'd locked himself in again."

Barbara took her usual chair by the fire. Mrs. Lodely, astride the hearth, scrutinized her more closely than was her custom.

"Barbara laid her head suddenly back against the dark wood of her chair and closed her eyes. There were such shadows under them that Mrs. Lodely's habitual laughter twisted in her throat.

"Here, I say," as a thought struck her—"I believe I know what's gettin' you. It's about Mark goin' up to Town with this young millionaire of ours and it's rotten for you, of course it is. But you know if Mark gets taken up by a really rich man, well, it'll be the makin' of him. You surely see that!"

"I see that," echoed Barbara. She had not opened her eyes. "Toppin' of you to take it like that!" breezed Mrs. Lodely. "Look here, Bab, why don't you and he get married before he goes to Town. First thing Thursday mornin'?"

used to marry Mark. "What money, Judy?" "My own m-money," she said, stuttering a little as she often did when making a great effort to concentrate. "It's precious little, but I've bin thinkin' that it'd help you if Mark had it. Keep him in canvass and oils. He's always borrowed as much of it as he could, anyway"—her laugh was rueful—"best make it over to him entirely. Especially now we know he's blown his Aunt Alice's legacy."

"But what on earth do you propose to live on yourself if you give your income to Mark?" "I thought 'praps I could get a job somewhere. Somethin' to do with horses and dogs. Of course, I suppose to you I seem a pretty useless old hulk—but I've been told a dozen times I'd have made a wonderful kennel-woman. I've had it in mind a long time. Give me somethin' to do when you've taken Mark away."

"I think you had better find your job before you part with your income," said Barbara languidly. "Thanks for the advice!" Mrs. Lodely retorted. "But y'know, your generation doesn't always get the laugh of us old 'uns. I was out in the world before you were in your cradle and I don't need teachin' the alphabet just because you're scrapin' a livin' as a dressmaker." She felt her face grow red and made a last clutch at her self-control. "However there's no need for us to quarrel. I don't want to quarrel, I'm sure."

She plumped herself by the earth and poked violently and unskillfully at the fire. When she had reduced a quite pleasant flame to a thin plume of smoke, Barbara took the poker from her and coaxed back life and light to the embers. Her lips remained closed.

"What's the matter with you?" shot out Mrs. Lodely. "Savin' nothin' like that is just jolly nerly sulkin', Bab, and sulkin' is a trait I hate in anyone. For pity's sake, don't you start any moods—Mark's are more than enough for me." Her confidence in herself was by now re-established. "I'm sorry if I was a bit hasty," she apologized. "I'm upset myself by all Mark's silly-shaliness."

"If you haven't talked to Mark since last night," asked Barbara, after a pause, "how do you know that he is going to London on Thursday?" Mrs. Lodely found herself meekly explaining.

"Why, he—Farrell Armitage—told me about it just as you and he were gettin' into his car. I thought it was a bit odd of him—"

"I see... I think I hear Mark movin' about upstairs." "I don't... didn't you like our young millionaire, Bab?" "Don't you think it is rather offensive perpetually to refer to him in that way?"

"Well, I'm dashed!" Barbara had sprung to her feet and only by a miracle did her chair, pushed violently back, miss the rickety china closet behind her. The wild-rope flush had gone from her cheeks. She looked white; wild, reckless, at bay... She walked unsteadily to the window and peered out between the heavy, dusty curtains.

"I didn't get any sleep last night," she said. "I'm sorry, Judy dear. I've worked all day. I'm tired out." Mrs. Lodely took a long breath. This was more like it.

"What did you do with the mill—with Farrell Armitage?" she asked. The words came to Barbara through such a fog of fatigue and dismay that they caused her no embarrassment whatever. Vaguely she guessed that Judy, at least, would never again really matter. Oh, if only she had someone to hold on to. Someone strong!

In any case, there was no need to answer Judy, because Mark was coming down the stairs. (Copyright, 1932, Julia Clef-Addams)

Mark goes off on a new tack, Monday. Smithfield, N. C., Dec. 31.—The great demand for ardent spirits at the Christmas time actually wound its way up into the jail, itself, and Iola Boykin, a young colored woman of this town, will have six months, to be served by her in jail, to determine why she went to the jail upon three separate occasions during Friday, December 23, to sell liquor to the inmates of that institution.

This woman was tried at the term of recorder's court this week. Her sales of liquor to the inmates of the jail became apparent when Annie Lee Jones, a white prisoner, became beastly drunk Friday, and it was then that a close watch of Iola Boykin's activities was made, resulting in her conviction and sentence of six months.

UNITS IN CALDWELL KEEP UP PAYMENTS. Lenoir, N. C. Dec. 31.—While many other county and municipal governments in North Carolina are defaulting in payment of principal and interest on bond issues, Caldwell County, the city of Lenoir and the board of city school trustees are maintaining a high credit rating by making payments on schedule time. A total of $26,697.50 in principal and interest is to be paid on January 1, it was learned.

THAT TECHNOCRACY QUESTION

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third of a series of six daily articles giving a new insight into Technocracy whose prediction of possible economic collapse started a far-flung controversy. The articles also present other statistics pertaining to displacement of men by machines, energy consumption, debts and other points involved.

By J. R. BRACKETT (Copyright, 1932, By The Associated Press)

New York, Dec. 30.—(AP)—A new "money," an exact, invariable token of exchange based on energy, is one of the tentative proposals of Howard Scott, director of Technocracy, as a need of this economic system. But why a new money? Because in the eyes of Scott, the present system of exchange, coupled with other attributes of the price system such as debt, interest, and the dollar's variability as a measurement of wealth, interferes with the machine and social progress.

This is part of the paradox of poverty in the midst of plenty, wherein huge factories lie idle, willing and physically able to produce, but prevented from doing so because of the lack of purchasing power among the people—a lack partly accounted for, according to Scott, by the concentration of money in the hands of a few.

Says "Price System" Finished. Does Scott propose the total abolition of the price system, of banks, of interest, of mortgages and finally of the dollar itself? The present system is finished, Technocracy says, and the country must realize that the price system will no longer work.

Neither Scott nor Technocracy has publicly explained fully what a new system of direction would include, so far as the replacement of the present exchange system is concerned. A unit of "value" under the price system, as Scott describes it, is a "certification of debt"—a lien, theoretically, against a physical entity. Under technological control, a unit of "measurement" would be a "certification of available energy produced."

Instead of trying to value goods in terms of dollars of variable purchasing power, Technocracy would measure the energy produced—so to speak, would measure the income instead of the capital—in calories, ergs, foot-pounds, British Thermal Units, horsepower or with some of the other terms for energy measurement which are theoretically exact and which would be used up. This Technocracy holds would prevent debt and huge accumulations of wealth. The individual would receive a proportionate share of the energy produced. He would spend it in certain ways for the things he desired. The energy unit would not be a measure of desire as is the dollar, but a measurement of what actually was available and might be economically given to the people. All of this implies central distribution of income and a more rigid control of the division of goods.

Economists are critical of such proposals. George Soule, economist and associate editor of the New Republic, says if the nation could have such control as this present old-fashioned money would do quite well. As for Scott's statements that energy units would furnish exact measurements, an economist for a Wall Street financial house points out that the amount of energy produced from coal oil and waterpower is variable and that the measurements of it are also variable. Unless Technocracy proposes absolute control of the entire economic system, this economist says, the more efficient user of fuel would receive more income and would accumulate things, again unless the state prevented such accumulation.

Boottleg "Energy Money"? Another economist holds more or less facetiously that "energy money" could be quite easily boottlegged. The hills might be full of "illit stills" for the manufacture of energy which would be wired secretly to towns and cities.

It might be transported across national lines, if such lines were allowed in a technologically controlled system. And what would happen if transmission of power were made possible by radio, a possibility now receiving considerable study? These would be the economist said, factors tending to make energy extremely unstable.

Many economists have proposed a commodity dollar to alleviate the generally admitted evils of the present variable dollar. Such a dollar would be allocated purchasing power according to a commodity index and would vary as the supplies of the various commodities varied. This money would always have approximately the same purchasing power and debts would not vary in their burdensomeness.

Talks to Parents

GOOD MANAGEMENT. He has learned to manage things very nicely indeed. Very early, apparently, he stumbled on the fact that when father punished, mother would sympathize. What pleasanter arrangement could a little boy ask?

One wonders whether he does not often purposely goad father to the point of punishment merely for the satisfaction which he must get out of the friction which it surely will cause between them. Little boys are jealous of their fathers in any event. Always we can be sure that they will capitalize the possibility of creating a discord by means of which they will find themselves aligned with mother against father as a common enemy.

The situation does not make for good discipline or for a wholesome family atmosphere. However much parents may disagree with each other's "methods," they should take pains to present a united front. NOTICE OF SALE OF REAL ESTATE. UNDER and by virtue of the power of sale contained in those two certain Mortgage Deeds executed by Isaac Carr and wife, Susan Della Carr, to Geo. A. SPORT SLANTS

By ALAN GOULD

The two clubs to beat in the major league pennant races next season, as a result of two outstanding player snags, appear to be Washington and Pittsburgh, world series rivals seven years ago, but since then able to show only one championship between them.

Pittsburgh in the view of most baseball men, came off with the main prize of the three-cornered deal with the Giants and Phillies by obtaining Freddie Lindstrom. The Chicago boy, who had his first big baptism of fire in the 1934 world series with the Giants, replacing Henie Groh, will team with the Warner boys in giving Pittsburgh the greatest outfield in the National League, if not in baseball.

We will be mighty tough to stop if our young fellows who came through so handsomely last season, including Vaughan at short, Piet at second and Grace behind the bat, continue to develop, admitted George Gibson, pilot of the Buccaneers. Lindstrom will give us that extra punch.

Griffith "Faxed" Ent
On all sides the "Old Fox," Clark Griffith, is credited with pulling another smart deal by acquiring Walter Stewart, Goose Goslin and Fred Schulte from the Browns in exchange for Lloyd Brown, Max West and Carl Reynolds.

So far as the Browns were concerned dissatisfaction with the temperament and attitude of the players they traded had considerable to do with clinching the deal. Stewart has been a holdout, but he is one of the greatest southpaws in baseball. He goes well against the tough clubs and will be welcomed by the Washington players, who found him as difficult to beat as Lefty Groove.

Goslin, always a popular favorite in Washington, will bring back a big punch that the Senators have missed. The Goose was traded to the Browns during Walter Johnson's regime as manager, due partly to some differences with "Big Barney," but Johnson's departure removes any possible source of irritation in this respect. No doubt all will be forgotten and forgiven as soon as Goslin starts pumping home runs out of Griffith Stadium again.

Harris Likes Senators
"It won't be a breeze for the Yankees next year," promised Bucky Harris, manager of the Tigers, after he heard about Washington's big swap with the Browns. "That trade will strengthen the Senators a great deal. They have always been tough for the Yankees to beat, and they will be tougher."

The Athletics will miss Simmons, but they are sure to have great pitching again, and that's certain to keep them in the running. The White Sox will be much stronger. Cleveland will be a real factor, and I'll be disappointed if my own club isn't very much in the fight.

"Detroit did pretty well last season. We are coming along, I think, and if a couple of youngsters we have live up to advance notices, keep your eye on the Tigers."

TEACHERS TO MEET ROCKY MOUNT "Y"

The Teachers will meet the Rocky Mount Y. M. C. A. cage team Tuesday night in the campus building. The "Y" team is reported to be one of the strongest teams the Teachers will meet this season and a good game is forecast.

The Teachers have been showing up well in scrimmages during the holidays and are fast rounding into shape. The Teachers have one of the strongest cage teams in this part of the state. On their schedule are listed games with State College freshmen, Wake Forest freshman, Atlantic Christian College, Campbell College, High Point College and others.

HOLLYWOOD SIGHTS & SOUNDS

By ROBBIN COONS
Hollywood, Cal.—(AP)—Even the most promising discoveries have to be trained for pictures now-a-days and it is seldom that little unknowns step from obscurity and go places all at once.

Dorothy Wilson did. Yes, but even so she isn't missing training.

And the best training, as Hollywood knows it, can be found in the western. After her first flash in "The Age of Consent," Dorothy, erstwhile studio stenographer, was introduced to the disciplinary as well as educational benefits of playing in rugged outdoor melodramas.

She has supported Bill Boyd and been leading lady to Tom Keene in one of his westerns, both roles calculated to test a starlet's determination and ability to troupe.

She isn't alone in the ordeal. One of Gail Patrick's first assignments is a part in Zane Grey's "The Mysterious Rider," and Florence Britton, who used to work for Samuel Goldwyn but never attained prominence, takes a fresh start as Tim McCoy's leading lady in "The Brand Trapper."

Just why training in westerns produces troupers and actresses—and Joan Crawford is only one of today's stars who look back upon schooling in the horse opera—is evident from a glance at the schedule

Dorothy Wilson has followed for the past five weeks, on two successive films.

To arise at 3 a. m. in order to be made-up and reach location by sun-up is only the first hardship. She then works until sundown, reaching home between 9 and 10 p. m. Much of the work is, of course, on horseback. She is not complaining. "Stenographic work was never like this," she sighs. "This work is harder—but the pay, that is marvelous."

Gene Raymond, who dislikes to be called "platinum blond," found on his recent visit to New York that his movie name meant little to the theatre ushers, cashiers and stagehands who greeted him warmly as Raymond Guion, his real name.

Gene formerly with Paramount signed with Jesse Lasky for "Soo in Budapest," and may do more for the independent producer.

Hollywood, Calif., Dec. 30.—When Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. decides to write a novel—if his current first attempt is to be a criterion of his future procedure—the decision is simply a matter of filing a roommate's nicely bound notebook and starting to work. It was on his last visit to Paris that the exuberant younger Fairbanks proceeded as above related and, determined to compress his entire book into the pages of this one volume, began on the homeward boat to inscribe his creation in a fine, microscopic penning that is almost illegible, even to himself.

To date he has sixty-four neatly typed pages as fruit of his literary labors—the total representing endless hours of dictation from his original manuscript, more hours of revision, and enough figurative sweat and blood to prove that he is serious in the ambition for a writing career.

At twenty-five, Doug, Jr. probably has more enthusiasm, hobbies, and avocations than any other actor hereabouts. Since he was stung by the writing bee his old professional interest in painting has become only a hobby. He also boxes, studies chess—he's president of a chess club—wrestles occasionally, reads omnivorously, and is avid on political and economic subjects.

Acting Comes First
Where the spare time comes in, I still don't see—but he finds it, and writes. Not that he's placing that ahead of his acting, which remains first in interest.

Auto Industry Begins '33 With Clean Shelves

By DAVID J. WILKIE

Detroit, Dec. 31.—(AP)—Having seen so many of their predictions during the last three years go awry, leaders of the motor car industry are uniformly reluctant to make any prognostications as to what the new year will bring in the way of increased retail demand.

Because the year just closed brought a new low mark for more than 12 years they hope for a better showing during the next 12 months, but just how much better they leave for the future to tell.

The industry closed the year 1932 with virtually no "loftovers"—old models to be sold at cut price. Just as absolute control of production on the basis of actual demand had become an integral part of its manufacturing scheme, so too, did the control of new model appearance await the clearing out of dealers' hands of all cars unsold.

Here and there, of course, a few cars remained in dealers' stocks when the new models came off the assembly lines, but so far as possible the merchandising division was given ample time to prepare for the new car campaigns.

Favoring the hopes of the industry's leaders for the coming year is the fact that with few exceptions every manufacturer will compete for business with new or improved models. The new models already off the assembly lines show a further trend toward streamlining, longer wheelbase, roomier seating arrangements and a tendency toward smaller wheels and larger tires.

In several instances the cars have been lowered, the claim for this alteration being that it contributed to greater "roadability," the elimination of sidesway and to some extent a lessening of road shock.

In the color scheme, no marked changes are indicated so far as standard models are concerned, although it is one of the boasts of the industry that "the motorist may have what he wants."

Concerning trade activities in 1933, the belief appears more or less general that while no great price reductions if any, are in prospect, the annual shows in January should see the opening of an active campaign among the producers of low priced cars.

FLU SPREADS IN THE COUNTY

The remainder of the three hundred cases contained in the estimate were confined to virtually every other section with few towns and communities escaping.

The flu is not as severe as in former years, assuming the form of a severe cold accompanied by temperatures in many instances. Patients in the majority of instances are able to be out in three or four days, but some suffering more severely have remained in bed as long as two weeks.

Dr. McGeachy said there was no reason for alarm and urged the people to take every safeguard while the influenza is going its rounds.

FARM LEADERS SEE HOPE IN NEW LEGISLATIVE AID

Thomas D. Campbell, of Hardin, Mont., world's "biggest wheat farmer," predicted "the end of 20-cent wheat" on American farms by the advent of the next harvest.

Advocates of the voluntary domestic allotment plan in a bill before the short session of Congress said that if it passed and escaped Presidential veto there was a chance it would add $700,000,000 to the annual income from wheat, cotton, hogs, tobacco and rice.

Henry A. Wallace, Mid-West farm editor who has been suggested as President-Elect Roosevelt's Secretary of Agriculture, said in summing up organized agricultural view of 1933 prospects:

"The Democratic administration has almost superhuman tasks before it. It must lower taxes constructively and not destructively. It must work out low tariffs on industrial products and make arrangements to trade industrial products from abroad for our surplus agricultural products.

"It must work out plans for making the tariff effective on agricultural commodities of which there is an exportable surplus until such time as the entire tariff structure is made to serve the ends of even-handed economic justice.

"It must take sound action on the monetary system, not only from a national but also an international view, and work out forward-looking measures to adjust our entire social organization to the unemployment caused by modern machinery."

stantly, investigators said. Funeral services will be conducted from his late home tomorrow afternoon at 3 o'clock by Rev. M. A. Woodard, of the Free Will Baptist Church, and burial will be made in Reedy Branch Churchyard.

Mr. Wade was a tenant on the farm of Charlie McLahorn, and is survived by his wife and the following children:

Roy, Effie Lee, Laura, Mary Elma, Julia May, John Robert and Paul Beasley Wade. He is also survived by two sisters, Mrs. Ida Jones and Mrs. Leila Quinerly, both of Greene County.

BERRY BOUND OVER TO COURT

Fountain, among the men who assisted Chief of Police Bryant in attempting to arrest the bank robbers, said they identified the car in which Berry was caught as the one used in the attempted robbery.

A pistol, said to have been found on Berry when he was arrested near Princeton, was also identified as the one taken from the Bank of Fountain at the time five men attempted to burn their way into the safe.

A negro filling station operator, at whose place the alleged bandit car was parked the night the Goldsboro officers arrested Berry, said he was confident he would be able to identify the second member of the party who escaped when the policemen arrived.

Officers Weigh and Smith, of Goldsboro, who arrested Berry, attended the hearing and told what they knew in connection with the case. The car in which the man was riding contained considerable materials similar to those used in bank robberies and was bullet-ridden. The machine was said to have been stolen from New Bern several days before the Fountain episode on the night of December 15 in which Policeman Bryant was shot through the leg in an exchange of gunfire with the bandits.

NATIONS JOIN FIGHT ON ECONOMIC ILLS OF WORLD

ference but Europe looks nevertheless to a thorough discussion of both. Some nations look to Franklin D. Roosevelt, President elect of the United States, as the Moses who will lead the way to a promised land of renewed intercontinental trade.

In South America, particularly, a dozen many other spots of the world as well, the utterances of Mr. Roosevelt on tariffs during the election campaign gave hope that their goods and wares could again enter American markets.

Great Britain, its Ottawa trade pacts in force, hopes to bolster further during 1933 its Empire trade and to lift the pound sterling, if not to par, at least to a point of recognized safety.

In world economies the figures of President-Elect Roosevelt, Ramsay MacDonald and Joseph Stalin stand out as luminaries of 1933. For international politics add to the list Sadao Araki, Japan's War Minister, dominant Japanese figure in the Far Eastern situation, and Kurt von Schleicher, Germany's chancellor and strong man.

Roosevelt and MacDonald are looked upon as statesmen whose "yes" or "no" will make or break the economic conference and whose co-operation may finally untangle the war debt snarl. American and British influence will play an immense part in the efforts to cut world budgets by disarmament.

"Will Joseph Stalin's second five-year plan aid or upset world recovery?" is a looming question.

Political questions, dominated as they are by economic problems, still give the world much to think about and a certain uneasiness. The unsolved Manchurian troubles of China and Japan threaten peace in a wider area than Asia if some road of conciliation is not found.

Japan and China have their astute diplomats at Geneva and world capitals, but War Minister Araki of Japan, responsible only to his emperor and to Japanese public opinion, will largely determine what will happen in Manchuria.

Russia, alive to the consequences of a spark in the powder train, has concluded non-aggression pacts with Western powers, restored diplomatic relations with China, and has let it be known that recognition of its government by the United States would go far towards keeping the Pacific pacified.

Again, as in January, 1932, the situation in Germany is causing anxiety in Europe. Will Hitler and his Fascists crown their long struggle for power? Will some sudden event lead to a restoration of the monarchy? Both are questions of the moment, and Kurt von Schleicher, German chancellor, is apt to have a large say in their determination.

By HERBERT PLUMMER
Washington, D. C., Dec. 30.—It will be interesting to observe in the months following March 4 just what John N. Garner will do with his new job of Vice-President and President and presiding officer of the Senate.

Every thing in "Cactus Jack's" almost thirty years as a national figure would seem to indicate that it would be hard for him to make of the Vice-Presidency the rather tame sort of affair that his predecessors, perhaps of necessity, have made of it.

He seems not the type. To use his own expression, he's never happier when he's "bellybitting"—as he denies it—rawhiding his political opponents.

Dawes Tried It
The only Vice-President in recent times who has attempted anything like that was Charles G. Dawes. But the Senate promptly and effectively squelched him.

Garner, probably, is too well versed in the Senate's ways of doing things to attempt anything with that body that even remotely resembles a departure from the traditional and ordered way. Fifteen terms in Congress, even if spent on the other side of the Capitol, have taught him much about that subject.

Some observers profess to see in the fact that when Governor Roosevelt came to the capital some weeks ago to talk over the war debt situation with President Hoover, and Garner boarded the train at Baltimore and was later summoned to the governor's hotel for a conference around midnight, that the Vice-President-elect was destined for an entirely new role in the coming administration.

But it must be remembered that Garner is still Speaker of the House. Whoever held that job during Roosevelt's visit would most certainly have been called in for consultation on a problem which in the last analysis must be handled by Congress.

A New Role, Maybe
It may be that Garner will find his cue in acting as a sort of contact man between the White House in order to speed up their arrival in Washington.

In 1921, for example, Nebraska appointed two grandmothers as messengers. In their anxiety to be the first to arrive they chartered a plane. Bad weather forced them to abandon their plane, however, and take a train.

A Reception in 1917
Perhaps the greatest reception an electoral messenger ever received in the capital was California's back in 1917. It was after the memorable campaign of 1916 between Wilson and Hughes.

Everybody thought the night of the election that Wilson had been defeated.

It was California that saved the day for him.

When the messenger arrived in the capital he was met by a dry delegation of Democrats and escorted to the capital. The Vice-President personally received him and was photographed accepting the vote.

Nation Grows Interested
Incidentally, the nation invariably gets extremely curious about the electoral college about this time every four years. Information about the institution is being sought by the curious. Questions about its purpose and functions pour into the offices of the House clerk and Senate secretary.

Each State has as many votes in the electoral college as it has seats in the House and Senate. Territories and possessions are without representation. Since there are 435 seats in the House and 96 in the Senate, the total is 531. A majority, or 266, is necessary to elect.

Washington, D. C., Dec. 24.—If more of the new members of Congress who take their seats on next March 4 would take a tip from the two women just elected to the House, they'd probably be spared a lot of grief in the months to come.

Mrs. Virginia Jenckes, of Indiana, and Miss Kathryn O'Loughlin, of Kansas, lost no time in getting to the capital to find out what it's all about when Congress was convened for the short session.

Mrs. Jenckes set herself up in the office of Representative Cox, of Georgia. Miss O'Loughlin, who expected a promise from Ruth Bryan Owen before she was elected to teach her the ways of a Congressman, is here to see the session through.

Neither one can do anything official. They may sit on the floor and listen, but that's all.

That means a lot, however. Must Learn the Job
The late Champ Clark, former Speaker of the House, was fond of saying that a man must learn to be a representative just as he must learn to be a blacksmith, a carpenter, a farmer, an engineer, a lawyer, or a doctor.

"Horace," said Clark, "once wrote that a poet is born, not made. But Congressmen—that is, useful Congressmen—are made largely by experience and practice."

Start At the Foot
It's very easy for a freshman representative or senator to get off to a wrong start. That familiar phrase the beginner must start at the foot of the class and spell up holds with a new congressman.

Old-timers in the House have a treatment of their own for the newcomer who rushes in headlong before he knows what it is all about. They call it "applauding him under the seats."

It's effective, too. It doesn't take the greatest of men long to realize it's being applied.

Of course, the treatment doesn't work all the time. The Senate, famous for its ability to haze a newcomer and put him in his place, tried to work on Huey P. Long. But the "kingfish" went on "kingfishing" just the same.

A New Role, Maybe
It may be that Garner will find his cue in acting as a sort of contact man between the White House and Congress. President Hoover found it advisable to have such a man in Walter Newton, a former member of the House from Minnesota. Newton is one of the Hoover secretariat with the title of legislative secretary.

Garner's immediate predecessor, Charles Curtis, however, has had Congressional experience that rivals his, yet the President hasn't often openly called on him for such duty.
