FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT TAKES OATH OF OFFICE

New President Promises Immediate Effort Cure Nation's Economic Ills

Declares If Congress Unwilling To Cooperate In Program He Will Ask People For Wartime Power For Presidency As Means To Recovery

Washington, D. C., March 4.—(AP)—Franklin D. Roosevelt became President today in a setting vibrant with the gravity of national responsibility and declared in his inaugural address that he was prepared to submit a program of drastic remedies to cure the nation's economic ills.

Cheered by thousands as he pronounced his words of faith on the north steps of the Capitol, the new President added that if Congress did not help him carry this program to fulfillment he would ask that wartime powers be vested in the Presidency.

He outlined only in general terms the program he had in mind, but named among his objectives new safeguards for banking and against speculation.

His induction into office was the high moment of an old-time inauguration to which one of the largest crowds in history had come.

Vice-President Garner had taken the oath of office nearly an hour before his chief in a short ceremony in the Senate Chamber.

A mammoth parade started immediately after the President's address and reviewed by Mr. Roosevelt from the White House stand brought the pageant to an end.

President Roosevelt in his address told the nation that he would ask for war-time power if necessary to meet the national emergency. The newly-inaugurated President said he would call a special session of Congress to carry out his plans of action on the crisis, saying, "We must act and act quickly," but he did not reveal when he would call it.

Among the policies outlined, the nation's new leader said there must be adequate but sound currency.

Mr. Roosevelt, in part, said: "I am certain that my fellow-Americans expect that on my entry into the Presidency I will address them with candor and with decision that the present situation in the nation impels. This is primarily a time to speak the truth honestly and boldly."

Nor need we shrink from honestly facing conditions in our country today. This great nation will endure as it has endured, and will revive and prosper, so first of all let me assert my firm belief that the only thing we have to fear is fear itself, namely, unreasonable and unjust terror which paralyzes the needed effort to convert retreat into advance.

In every dark hour of our national life a leadership of frankness and vigor has met that understanding and support of the people themselves, that is essential to victory. I am convinced that you will again give that support to your leaders in these critical days.

In such a spirit on my part and yours we face the coming difficulties. They concern only material things. Values have shrunk to fantastic levels, taxes have risen and ability to pay fallen. Government of all kinds face curtailment, means of exchange frozen, curtailed trade with the dried leaves of industrial enterprise lying on every side. The farmer can find no market for his produce, savings of many years of thousands of families are gone; more important, there is a host of unemployed citizens facing the grim problem of existence. Only the foolish optimist can deny the dark realities of the moment. Yet our history of distress comes from no failure of substance; compared with the perils which our forefathers conquered because they believed and were not afraid leaves us still much to be thankful for; the money changers have fallen from their high seats in the temple; we may now restore the temple to truth. The measure of restoration lies in the extent to which we apply the social values.

PLANES CARRY ICE CREAM INTO JUNGLE GOLD FIELDS

Canberra, Australia.—(AP)—Ice cream and electricity are the latest gifts of civilization to the gold miners of the Bulolo fields hidden away in the tropic mountains of New Guinea, a territory which Australia administers under mandate.

Flying over impenetrable jungles filled with cannibalistic tribesmen, airplanes have brought the amenities of modern life to the gold fields. Even fresh vegetables appear on the tables at every meal.

STUDY BANK SITUATION IN THIS STATE

Banks Told To Continue Regular Business Without Restrictions if Possible

Raleigh, N. C., March 4.—(AP)—Lieutenant-Governor A. H. Graham, who expects to attend a meeting here tomorrow of the Advisory Banking Commission today declared that he believed additional steps to protect North Carolina banks were absolutely necessary before banking hours Monday.

The lieutenant-governor declined to say what steps he deemed advisable. "I want to hear the opinion of the bankers before answering that," he explained.

Governor Ehringhaus with whom the State Banking Department has been in constant communication, yesterday said he did not believe a banking holiday in North Carolina was necessary.

Raleigh, N. C., March 4.—(AP)—The State Advisory Banking Commission was meeting in extraordinary session here today to discuss plans to meet new developments in the banking situation. The new developments were described as the closing of New York and Illinois banks and the New York Stock Exchange.

Banks in all parts of the State in communication with the State Commissioner here were given instructions to remain open if possible and continue normal business without restrictions on withdrawals of deposits. At the same time a set of telegrams was being prepared to go out to every bank in the State if the advisory commission decides they should be sent. It seems inevitable that all banks must go on a limited withdrawal basis, John G. Allen, of the liquidating department of the Banking Commission said.

The telegrams as drawn this morning do not order a state-wide banking holiday and will not be dispatched to the banks unless the commission finds after a survey of the situation that no other plans seem practical. It was learned from the Commissioner's offices.

Goldsboro, N. C., March 4.—(AP)—Branches of the First Citizens Bank and Trust Company at Clinton and Goldsboro today limited withdrawals to 5 per cent, and it was understood that the same limit applied to the bank's headquarters at Smithfield.

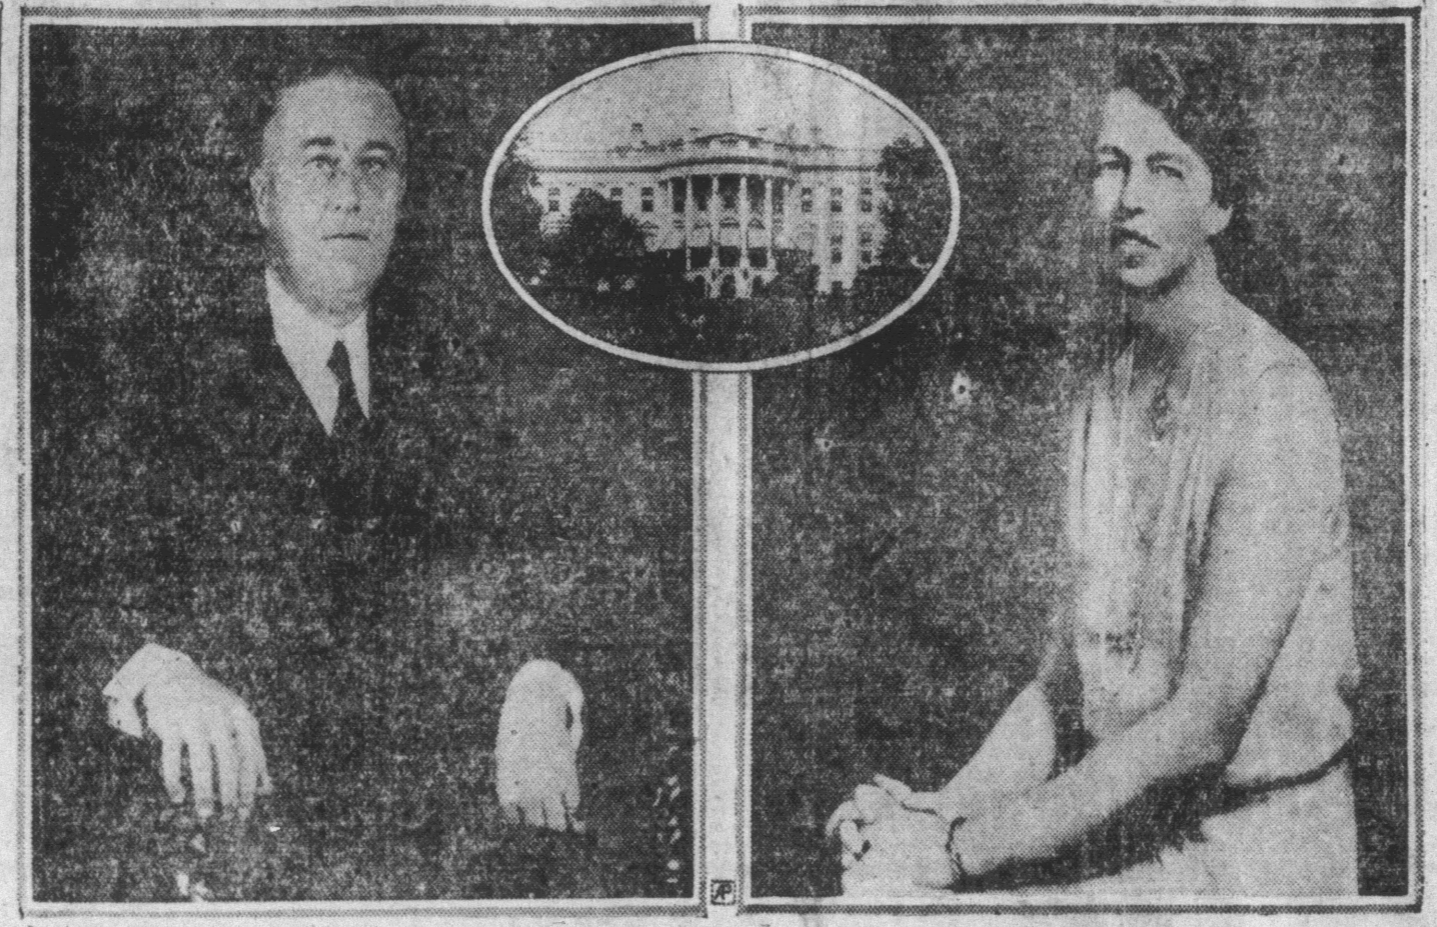

Raleigh, N. C., March 4.—(AP)—Thirty North Carolina banks today had advised themselves of the new State law giving the Banking Commissioner authority to allow banks to restrict withdrawals of deposits. The North Carolina Banking and Trust Company which operates branches in fifteen cities, and First Trust Company with branches in twelve cities received authority to limit withdrawals to 5 per cent on individual deposits. The Bank of Pinehurst and Gibsonville likewise were authorized to limit withdrawals to 5 per cent while the Independent Trust Company at Charlotte was allowed to cut withdrawals to 3 per cent. In addition the First National Bank of Asheville, that does not come under the State law, and two Greensboro industrial banks, had already announced the 5 per cent rate.

Chinese Flee From Jehol City

Chinchaw, Manchuria, March 4.—(AP)—While one Japanese brigade marched into Jehol City capital and chief city of the province, this morning another pushed southward from Lingyuan to occupy Lengchow pass in the great wall of China. Wholesale flights of the Chinese to the passes south of Lingyuan and Jehol was viewed by Japanese authorities as meaning a virtual end to the military campaign that began unofficially February 22.

HOOVER FAILS TO SIGN SMITH COTTON BILL

Last Few Minutes As Head Of the Nation Were Busy Ones For Hoover

Washington, D. C., March 4.—(AP)—One brief legislative action, completing formalities and the Seventy-second Congress became history with many tasks it had set for itself undone.

Unreconciled differences left two appropriation bills for the new Congress scheduled to meet within the next few days. They are the $33,800,000 District of Columbia and the billion dollar supply measure for independent offices carrying funds for payment to veterans. The District of Columbia bill failed to get through and Hoover refused to sign the independent offices measure, saying in a curt statement that it had been raised $139,200,000 over his recommendations.

The Chief Executive also refused to sign the Smith cotton bill. Its death signified almost complete failure of the length program for farm relief Congress outlined for itself when it met last December.

President Hoover's last minutes in office were busy ones. He arrived at the Capitol with President-Elect Roosevelt and went directly to the room where bills passed during the closing hours of Congress awaited his signature. Before his departure from the White House he had signed the $338,200,000 supply measure for the War Department.

The day saw the passing of many veterans from familiar surroundings including Moses, New Hampshire; South, Utah; and Watson, of Indiana.

A special Pennsylvania train with the President and Mrs. Hoover aboard left the Union Station at 10:30 p. m. for New York City.

Large Crowds Witness Interesting Founders Day Program At College

Address By T. Wingate Andrews and Tree Planting Exercises In Honor of Mrs. Beckwith Furnish Main Feature of Program

A goodly crowd in spite of the incursion and its various attractions today, gathered in the Campus Building of East Carolina Teachers College at 10:30 o'clock this morning to celebrate Founders Day, the twenty-fourth birthday of the institution. Many of the alumnae showed their loyalty by coming from far and near and are enjoying the annual get-together meeting.

The members of the faculty and those on the program were seated on the stage.

Mrs. Lillie Mae Dawson Thompson, acting president of the General Alumnae Association, presided with distinction. In her welcome she expressed the pride the alumnae take in their alma mater and the achievements of its daughters, referred to the marked changes found in the college, and emphasized the vast difference between the prosperous days, when the college in its training of teachers was given adequate support without question, and the situation today. Now the fight of materialism, she said, is in danger of pushing education back to the days when Aycock made his fight if it were not for many men and women who have themselves been trained and are determined their children have even better training.

She then introduced President Wright, who gave some interesting facts about the college and reminded the alumnae that the college had never swerved from its original purpose, that is, to train teachers, and that has always been part of the public school system of the State.

He introduced the speaker of the day, T. Wingate Andrews, superintendent of High Point schools, as a man not only of State-wide but of national reputation, once president of the North Carolina Education Association, and Director of the National Education Association.

The music featuring the program was excellent.

Dan Wright played a trumpet solo. Miss Mavis Evans, who has maintained the reputation as a singer that she made while in college, sang a vocal solo, "Trees."

Rev. R. F. Huske gave the invocation.

Preliminary to the second part of the program, the exercises in honor of Mrs. Beckwith, Mrs. Thompson paid very high tributes to her and introduced her to the audience, to most of whom, except the college students, she did not use introduction.

Mrs. Beckwith very graciously acknowledged the honor bestowed upon her, reminding the presiding officer that she was indeed too full for utterance.

She expressed joy over the progress of the college, gladness over the presence of so many of her daughters, and happiness over being able to be here. She very cleverly referred to a

KIWANIS HELD REGULAR MEET FRIDAY NIGHT

Address By F. C. Harding Furnished Principal Feature of Meeting

Discussing conditions of today and declaring that the two chief thoughts of mankind at this hour should be first that of the immortality of the soul and second, that of individual prosperity, Hon. F. C. Harding addressed the Kiwanis Club at its regular meeting at the Woman's Club last night. Referring to present-day conditions, the speaker pictured recent bank protective measures as being a great help for the future and declared that such action a few years ago would have saved hundreds of banks in this State, thereby saving great sums of money for the depositors. He declared that already the so-called little man has passed through the depression and that now it has hit these bigger up and the big industries and that we could now look for steps that would bring about prosperity for all. He pointed to the inauguration of a new administration today as the beginning of a new era, and expressed belief that all our people, regardless of partisan politics, would lend their support to the efforts of the incoming officials toward a return of prosperity and better conditions throughout the land.

Last night's program was in charge of B. B. Sugg, and Mr. Harding was introduced by John Mitchell. Prior to the address the club enjoyed vocal solos rendered by W. W. Lee, accompanied by Mrs. R. A. Tyson, Jr. Mr. Lee sang "Trees," and his other number described by him as the Hoover song, was entitled "Brother, Can You Spare a Dime?" C. B. Rowlett led in the club singing.

Another feature on last night's program was the introduction to the club of James Savage and Wilbur Mave, high school students recently designated Junior Kiwanians for a period of two months. The boys were introduced by D. H. Conley, and then an address of induction was delivered by Rev. W. A. Ryan. The boys were then presented the Kiwanis emblem.

Expect Speedy Action by New Congress On Nat'l Financial Emergencies

LEGISLATURE HOLDS SHORT SESSION TODAY

Only Few Members Present As Assembly Considers Local Bills

Raleigh, N. C., March 4.—(AP)—Representative Scarborough, Richmond, told the House today "we have no crystallized opinion as to how to raise revenue" as he noted it was the sixtieth day of this session of the Legislature. The Richmond colon lodged two motions instructing the Finance Committee not to write a general sales or selective commodity sales tax, but Speaker Harris said they were of a State-wide nature and could not be acted upon in today's local bills session. Scarborough withdrew them, but said he would send them in again Monday night. At first he had asked that they be placed upon the calendar for consideration Wednesday.

There were twenty members present at the seventeen minutes session. One new bill was received and four local measures passed.

In the Senate thirteen members were present and passed sixteen local bills.

Washington, D. C., March 4.—(AP)—Senator Robinson, Arkansas, said today that a bank relief program is being prepared to meet the financial emergency and would be hastened to action at an early meeting of the new Congress. Close word of two and three banking holidays declared respectively in New York and Illinois, there came declarations of similar holidays in other States and expressions from Democratic leaders on Capitol Hill were certain that the new Congress would be called into almost immediate session.

Doubt was expressed that any emergency legislation could be framed and passed in the few hours remaining of the Seventy-second Congress, but Robinson said a program the Democrats were working on would be expedited as much as possible. He added that details could not be disclosed at this time, but there would be no delay in pressing the matter forward.

The bank situation throughout the country at a glance is as follows: Open without restrictions on withdrawals, Arkansas, Mississippi, Wyoming, Kentucky, Indiana, Ohio, West Virginia, Kansas, also District of Columbia.

Restricted withdrawals by a few banks, Virginia, South Carolina and North Carolina.

Closed by holiday: Washington, Florida, Oregon, California, Idaho, Nevada, Utah, Arizona, New Mexico, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Texas, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Louisiana, Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, Tennessee, South Dakota, Alabama, Georgia, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, New Jersey, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Vermont, New Hampshire, Maine, Montana, North Dakota, and Colorado.

Should The Children EAT IT?

PARENTS, particularly mothers, are paying a lot of attention to children's diet these days. For it is far more economical and pleasant to keep a child well by feeding him correctly than by nursing and doctoring him back to health.

Of course in case of doubt the doctor should be consulted regarding what a child should eat and what he should not eat. But do you realize that the leading manufacturers of food now seek the advise and approval of the leading nutritional authorities in the country, relative to the claims they make for their products in their advertising?

In other words, food advertisements are reliable sources of information regarding diet. They are based upon the results of the latest approved scientific discoveries about vitamins, minerals and roughage, in relation to vigorous bodies, clear complexions, sound teeth and properly regulated systems.

So read these advertisements carefully. Consult your doctor about them. Very often the advertiser invites you to do this because he has asked authorities, whom your doctor respects, about statements made in those advertisements.

ASSOCIATION PRESIDENT Mrs. Lillie Mae Dawson Thompson of Goldsboro, acting president of the State Alumnae Association, who was chairman of the Founder's Day celebration at East Carolina Teachers College this morning.

Birthday Party. Little Wesley Smith entertained about twenty of his friends at a lovely party in honor of his tenth birthday at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon at his home on Cotanche street.

The guests upon arriving, were greeted and invited in the living room by the host. Games and contests were enjoyed. Much merriment was created by pinning the tail on a dog. The prizes were given to the one pinning one-half of the dog's tail to the other half while blindfolded.

Prizes were awarded John Bunch, Jr., Layton Clark, Anna Lee Register, Agatha Hill and Earl Bright. Another contest prize was awarded Joseph Register.

At this time the guests were invited into the dining room. The table was beautifully decorated with a lovely flat cover centered with the birthday cake with ten burning candles. Tapers flowing from the chandelier marked the places with a souvenir for each guest, carrying out the red, white and blue color scheme. Wesley's place was marked with a number of useful gifts. The following guests were served ice cream, cake and nuts by the host's mother: Anna Lee Register, Agatha Hill, Kathleen Williams, Estelle Bright and Helen Bunch, Loyd Hill Layton Clark, Billy Williams, Theodore Lupton, James Register, John Lupton, Joseph Register, John Bunch, Jr., Earl Bright, Leslie Smith and the little host, Wesley Smith.

About 5:30 the guests left, declaring a good time and wishing Wesley many more happy birthdays.

CHRISTIAN CHURCH TO OBSERVE WORLD MISSIONS DAY

The Eighth Street Christian Church will observe World Missions Day tomorrow with special service at the morning hour. Mr. Ryan will speak on "The New World and the World Mission of the Church."

In this modern world of classes, masses and races, there is urgent need of Christ and His message, but there is also great need for the presentation of Jesus' message without sectarian interpretation and emphasis. To accomplish this the church must be willing to lose some of its sectarian aspects that it may build up a sacrificial fellowship. These, and other aspects of our world missions problems will be present for consideration. There will be no special offering for missions at this time.

Leave For Red Springs.

Celebrates Birthday.

Miss Marion Brown, little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank M. Brown delightfully entertained a number of her little friends last Thursday evening at her home on Dickinson avenue, honoring her fourth birthday.

After enjoying many games and stries the little guests were invited into the dining room where a beautiful ice course was served.

Those enjoying the hospitality of little Marion were: Louis and Louise Collier, Shirley Savage, Joyce Briley, Helen and Frances Aman, Jean Cox Benjamin Earl Robeson, Ralph Cox Beby Smith, Mary Barden and Conrad Taylor, Peggy Ann House, Barbara Gardner, Mattie Clyde, Bobby and Ben Warren Brown.

Barrere Symphony Pleases Audience

"Absolutely perfect in rendition" was the verdict of one of the music critics who heard the Barrere Little Symphony concert at East Carolina Teachers College last evening.

Barrere, with magic powers, played on the orchestra as if it were one instrument, the musicians responding to every motion of his by giving back all the shyness of tone possible. Throughout the entire recital Mr. Barrere with his incomparable conducting, was able to bring out every nuance of the music in the most artistic manner. It was evident that every member of the orchestra was an artist.

The program was a masterpiece, the selection of the numbers giving full scope to their powers, and was satisfying to the audience. It was as if the orchestra brought out the moods and feelings in the audience as the conductor played on the orchestra.

When the concert was over, no one moved until after two selections had been played and Mr. Barrere waved good-night.

To North Carolinians, the two excerpts from Lamar Stringfield's "Southern Mountains," was natural of peculiar interest because they were composed by a North Carolinian and the composer was known to many in the audience. They did not, however, need this justification for a place on the program. The orchestra caught and passed on to the audience the fullness of the meaning of the realistic music. One could picture the mountaineers "At Evening" hear the sounds, and feel the mountain atmosphere. In "Cripple Creek" one could hear the mountaineers playing the fiddle, feel the swing of the dance, and catch the spirit of the life. Lamar Stringfield was a pupil of Barrere.

In the Minuetta in the Schubert Symphony and in the Hungarian dances, the rhythm was marvelous. The Schubert Symphony was the favorite with some and the Debussy number with others. The tone color in the latter was very lovely, ranging from the softest, most delicate tones possible up to brilliant, powerful tones.

The solos by the French horn and the violin made the Spanish numbers distinctive. The strings accompanied the violin with the tones so soft and far away that the solo, although very soft also, was penetratingly clear.

The flute numbers by Barrere came as a delightful surprise as they were not on the program. He gave a witty introduction to these, saying that people thought everybody in an orchestra worked except the conductor, and he was going to prove that the conductor could work also. He explained that these were given by request and were not usually inserted in the program. He gave two selections, one of them a melody from "Orpheus" by Gluck, that was described one of the musicians present as heavenly. The other number was just as enjoyable as that.

The two encores were good as any number on the program. One of these was "The March of the Little Tin Soldiers" by Piernez.

"They arrived late in the afternoon in a big red bus, coming directly here from Atlanta. They played at Duke University on Tuesday evening and the next night in Savannah. They left immediately after the concert to spend the night in Raleigh and are going from there to Knoxville and then on further west.

Frances Perkins, First Woman In Cabinet, Brings Sociologist's Zeal To Labor Post

Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor in the Roosevelt Cabinet, is used to desks loaded with many problems. Long experience in dealing with industrial relations and problems in New York State is expected to aid her in the new post.

New York, March 4.—(AP)—America's first woman cabinet member has an eager eye for such things as shop windows filled with bargain price frocks.

To Frances Perkins, new Secretary of Labor, price tags unreasonably low suggest the possibility of sweatshop conditions for the girls who make the dresses.

New York, under her direction as State Industrial Commissioner, has been active in attempting to eradicate the sweat shop.

Hers is Many-Sided Attack. Not only sweat shops, but old age pensions, unemployment insurance, minimum wage laws, labor exchange, fuller statistics on unemployment—all these items which have engaged her attention on a State-wide scale now become points of attack on a national basis.

Miss Perkins speaks her opinions in an even, calm voice, but her sparkling brown eyes belie any lack of interest. She is of medium height and medium stature. Her black wavy hair surmounts a high wide brow. She smiles easily, gestures little.

With a fastidious degree in sociology from Columbia University and with many years of practical work as a social welfare worker she has spent much time since she left Boston her birthplace, studying labor's problems, and seeking to solve them.

Urges High Wages. She urges high wages, believes most employers agree that they are necessary for sustained purchasing power. She has studied England's "dole," and is convinced some form of unemployment insurance will come to the United States.

As New York's Industrial Commissioner, she has argued with the Federal government as to the accuracy of the latter's figures on unemployment. Her New York figures to Perkins contention that the government's estimates were too low.

Carried to Paul Wilson—her maiden name because it is less confusing. She has one daughter.

At home she calls her office her hobby. At her office the home is the hobby.

N. C. Barnhill and wife to Vernon Carson, 34 acres, $800.

W. H. Bradsher and wife to John Taylor and wife, one lot, $100.

Eastern Cotton Oil Company to Mary M. Johnson, 75 acres, $1,308.

Interstate Trust Corporation, trustee, to N. C. Joint State Land Bank, 66.28 acres, $1,600.

C. A. Johnson, et als, to Mary Johnson, 22 acres, $10.

T. G. Worthington, et als, to Mary M. Johnson, 9 acres, $450.

Seeing Through My Windshield

(By ETHEL NICE, H. D. A.)

The 4-H girls of Bell Arthur, Child and Falkland met this week with 142 girls in attendance. Posture was the subject discussed in each group. Next month the subject will be "Grooming" and the April meetings will be devoted to making the Health check-up. This is the third year we have had health examinations to determine the healthiest girl in each club. Following the club eliminations the county winner is selected. In May we expect to have a county-wide 4-H program in Greenville and crown our healthiest girl as Harris of Pitt County. Last year Arlene Harris of Fountain, won this distinction.

Home Demonstration Clubs.

The Falkland Home Demonstration Club met Tuesday afternoon with Mrs. Jenness Moore. After the regular meeting refreshments were served and jig-saw puzzles were enjoyed.

The Red Oak Club met Wednesday afternoon with Mrs. B. L. Tyson as hostess. Mrs. Tyson and her committee served dainty refreshments and conducted several games after a short work period.

Mrs. Lonnie Stocks entertained the Hopewell Club at her home Friday afternoon. Each lady present made a button bound hole and two types of set-in pocket. Home made candy and Saint Patrick's games were enjoyed. Mrs. J. B. Beppard of Winterville, visited the club and assisted with the demonstrations.

4-H Council.

The 4-H Council will meet Saturday afternoon at the Woman's Club building.

Exchange Products.

Women throughout the county are exchanging various products and work. Mrs. J. R. Worthington, Ayden, R. 2, has a surplus of white onion sets and butter bean seeds (Wood's Prolific) she will exchange for other gardens seeds.

Club Member Record.

The following club paper was read at a recent club meeting at Bell Arthur. It was written by Virginia Lewis, daughter of H. R. Lewis: "History of My 4-H Club Work" On January 1, 1929, I started to Arthur School. Being in the third grade, I didn't think much of clubs. On January 8, 1929, Laura Rasberry

HOLLYWOOD SIGHTS & SOUNDS

By ROBBIN COONS Hollywood, Calif.—When you consider George Raft's remarks, as he tipped his hat and walked out of the cast of "The Story of Tompkins," you'll feel sorry for Jake La Rue, who replaces Raft. Said George: "The guy who plays Trigger is committin' suicide." But Raft, only a year and a half in pictures, is more than willing to run the risk. So you'll see him, the slightly perfumed but still sinister character studio scenarists have wrought from the loathsome creature "Pop-Eye" in the novel "Sanctuary." Not Jack's comparative inexperience in the films, but a desire to run the gamut of character roles

THE NEW DEAL

Into the office of President the United States today talked Franklin D. Roosevelt and with him the hopes of a nation. Long have our people suffered and long have they waited for the promised new deal that will bring back to them the opportunity to gain a living for themselves and an opportunity to pursue the happiness which each should be entitled.

We have every confidence in the ability of Mr. Roosevelt and feel that his efforts on behalf of the people of this nation will be untiring and uncompromising, but at the same time we call attention to the fact that without the help and support of the people no plan or program for the reconstruction of our depleted resources can succeed.

Our government should be the property of the people, by the people and for the people, and if it can be made that we are confident that Mr. Roosevelt will see to it that it is so made.

Despite the apparently unmountable problems ahead, we bespeak in advance for Mr. Roosevelt one of the greatest administrations in the history of our nation.

A FINE SPIRIT

Reports from local banks day are to the effect that there has been no unfavorable reaction as a result of financial disturbances elsewhere, and we take this opportunity to congratulate our people for this display of fine spirit and the use of common sense. As stated yesterday, our local banks are in most liquid condition and would pay every depositor every penny on demand, a fact that should be sufficient to convince all that there is no ground for a panic or fear.

The state banking commissioner this morning notified all banks to continue to do normal business if possible, which means that there will be no restrictions placed by the state on local banks unless our people become panicky and the banks are driven to take such steps. We reiterate such action here is not necessary and we believe our people will realize it and will continue to display their good judgment by plugging ahead with their affairs and not let themselves be overcome by unfounded fears.

VALIANT DUST

intrigue against France in the Citadel of Mekazzen, there are personal feuds. The Kaid of Mekazzen, Raisul his son, and Major Napoleon Riccotti of the Foreign Legion, camped not far away, conduct the chief intrigue. Beneath the surface there is the love of Raisul for Jules Maligni's English wife Margaret. After getting Jules drunk, Raisul frightens Margaret by entering her room. Jules' mother, to whom Margaret tells the incident, is furious at Margaret for protesting, and tells Jules Margaret has endangered all their positions with the powerful Raisul. Meanwhile Margaret waits in her mother-in-law's room.

Chapter 24 RAISUL'S FUN

"How do you know she threatened to shoot him?" Jules demanded of his mother. "She told me so herself." "Well, then, presumably she told you why?" "Why? You know, Raisul, you know what this Raisul is. Finding her alone and knowing the state you were in, he thought he'd have some fun." "Fun?" "What he calls fun."

"Yes, but surely that's a case for the swift snuff, the slap that brings the blush of shame to the cheek of naughtiness. Margaret's an English girl, and they don't go about shooting wayward young men very much. What did happen?" "Oh, she'll tell you, no doubt, and make a mighty story of it. Probably try to give you the impression that she had a desperate struggle with Raisul and that the only possible thing now is for you to kill him, to avenge your honor or some hysterical rubbish of that sort."

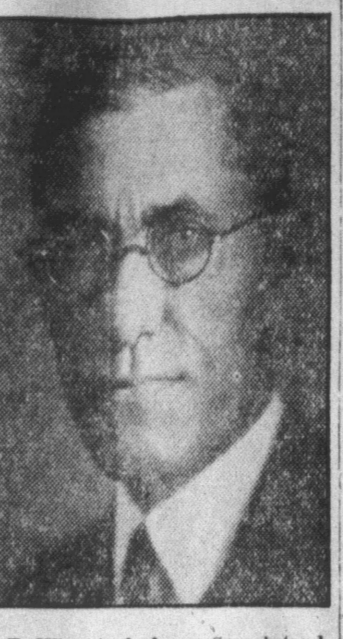

"That's absurd, of course, but... well... it's a bit difficult. Raisul mustn't annoy her, and if she really threatened to shoot him he must have annoyed her badly. It's a bit awkward. Oh, my son, why on earth did you marry an Englishwoman when you knew that your wife would come and join your father in Morocco, when the time was ripe?"

"But suppose Raisul offends Margaret?" "Then one of two things; she must not take offense—or she must go. Go where? You don't mean go to Heaven, do you?" "It's said to be a good place for saints," replied El Isa Beth el Ain dryly. "But I did not mean Heaven. She could go back to England."

"I can't go back to England now. Father and I are..." "I did not say you, my son. I said your wife. Since she finds Raisul's nonsense so shocking she has a simple remedy—she can go away; she can go back to England—in theory until you rejoin her. If she gets tired of waiting there for you, she can come back again, and see how Raisul behaves then."

"Why can't women help their husbands instead of hindering them?" she added angrily. "Help them as I've helped mine—at any cost." "You're different, my dear. You're very different. I put my husband's interests and welfare—let alone his life—before a silly trifle like a kiss."

"Yes, I said you're different from Margaret." "Very well, let this different woman go back to her own country." "And what about me?" "Yes, and what about you—and your father, not to mention your mother—if the girl refuses to go, and also refuses to be friendly with Raisul?" "Oh Lord," roared Jules. "Perfect little headache-cure, aren't you? Better than three aspirins and a cup of coffee, any day." "I'll have both, I think," he added. "So you beetle off, and make me a cup, strong and black, and about a pint of it. Beetle off, Mother, and let Sera bring it."

T. Wingate Andrews, Superintendent of High Point Schools, one of the leaders in the field of education in North Carolina.

He said that public education is what it is in America today largely because of the leadership of American colleges and universities. He stressed the point that one of the most important factors in the development of this system has been the contribution made by the American cities, and showed that the cities, without waiting for the States to take the lead, have established school systems and have set standards for the States to follow.

"If we are to carry out our schools even approximately intact through this crisis, we must lay hold upon something besides the amount of money which they cost. Over against this cost, and in such juxtaposition that the two items may be seen at one glance, should be set up the cost of not having schools. Civilization must not be allowed to break at the very heart of its vitality and power to recuperate."

"No people appreciate more keenly than do school people the primitive uses to keep budget within limits made mandatory by shrinking State and local revenues. They have felt the full brunt of the blow. They have absorbed the shock of impact. As yet, however, their spirits have not bowed to fate. They stand erect and ready, in co-operation with all other citizens and agencies of the State, to accept their full share of such further personal sacrifices as may be necessary to enable the State to maintain, during this period of deep distress, the indispensable elements of civilization among which are its institutions of public education."

"Civilization," according to him, "is a race between education and catastrophe. He did not dare prophesy what the issue would be, but this much he set down as certain: 'Education is running under a tremendous handicap.' by education, he explained, he meant not merely schools, but what one gets both in and out of school, and by handicap he did not mean primarily lack of funds, but something of more fundamental and abiding nature. 'It is the progressively widening gap between human beings as they are born and the civilization into which they are born.'"

He showed how the machinery of civilization has been built up inch by inch throughout the centuries as new machines sprang full grown from the parent machines each one older, wiser, and more efficient than its parent, or predecessors. He took as the most striking example the rapidity of the development of the airplane. He made it very clear that this principle does not prevail in biology; that the human race does not transmit directly its acquired characteristics to its offspring. "The offspring of the college graduate is not born a college graduate, and the chief advantage a child has lies in the fact that it has educated parents to take up at once the process of education."

He gave this definition: "Education is the process of helping individuals make adjustments as speedily and as effectively as possible." "The duty of the State to maintain its educational institutions at the highest possible standard of efficiency," he said, "is as imperative as any obligation with which statesmanship can concert itself. The civilization which we have built up in this State, and throughout the world, cannot be sustained and carried forward by indifferently trained and educated people. Furthermore, the amount of training and education which the citizen of tomorrow will require that our educational institutions be stronger, and not weaker, than they are today."

He called attention to the fact that the Constitution provides that no child in the State shall have less than a certain amount of educational opportunity, and that the minimum today is a six months' school term. He developed this further. "Concurrently with the rise of the policy of 'complete' State support of the six months' term," he says, "has sprung up a new philosophy of equality of educational opportunity. Instead of 'not less than,' this new philosophy would decree 'not more than.' Whereas the original philosophy would require that no child shall have more than a six months' school until the State is able to give every other child more than a six months' school; that no child shall be taught by a college graduate until the State is able to provide a college graduate for every child; that no child shall have college graduates for parents until the State is able to offer every other child the same advantages; and that no child shall have any other opportunity until the State is able to provide the same opportunity for every other child. Short of these extreme provisions, and extreme ones, if extreme ones can be thought of, the State cannot enforce equality of educational opportunity."

He stressed the point that one of the most important factors in the development of this system has been the contribution made by the American cities, and showed that the cities, without waiting for the States to take the lead, have established school systems and have set standards for the States to follow. He also pointed out that the move to deprive these cities of their power to maintain these standards would be unjust and a backward step that would be disastrous to the educational history of the State.

It is preposterous, he believes, to assume that the State can improve the educational opportunities of one child by the mere act of impairing the educational opportunity of another child. "The new philosophy of equality of educational opportunity in North Carolina is as unique as it is amazing and incredible."

He closed with the following: "If we are to carry out our schools even approximately intact through this crisis, we must lay hold upon something besides the amount of money which they cost. Over against this cost, and in such juxtaposition that the two items may be seen at one glance, should be set up the cost of not having schools. Civilization must not be allowed to break at the very heart of its vitality and power to recuperate."

"No people appreciate more keenly than do school people the primitive uses to keep budget within limits made mandatory by shrinking State and local revenues. They have felt the full brunt of the blow. They have absorbed the shock of impact. As yet, however, their spirits have not bowed to fate. They stand erect and ready, in co-operation with all other citizens and agencies of the State, to accept their full share of such further personal sacrifices as may be necessary to enable the State to maintain, during this period of deep distress, the indispensable elements of civilization among which are its institutions of public education."

INAUGURATION DAY

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT

While only President and Mrs. Roosevelt will reside in the White House, members of their family are expected to be frequent visitors. Here is a family group. Seated, left to right: President Roosevelt, Mrs. Roosevelt, holding her granddaughter, Joan Dall, Mrs. Curtis Dall, holding Curtis, Jr., and Mrs. Sara Delano Roosevelt, the President's mother. Standing are Mrs. James Roosevelt, Franklin, Jr., James, John, Curtis Dall, the son-in-law of the President, and Mrs. Elliott Roosevelt. (Associated Press Photo).

This historic white mansion, its shimmering image reflected in the spacious lawn, today has a new master and mistress. (Associated Press Photo).

Last evening in the high school auditorium the Greenville High School girl basketball team lost a fast, close game to the Wilson girls, 22 to 30. Although outclassed by the visitors, the local girls played their hardest game of the season, leading in the scoring at the end of the first quarter and half, and even at the third quarter. Individually, the visiting girls were faster at practically all times during the game, but Coach Langston's team excelled in co-operative teamwork. The work of the guards was particularly outstanding in every period. Elberidge was high scorer for Greenville, netting 13 points, and was ably assisted by the other forwards: Dixon, Hill, and Crawford. The scoring was very even until the last two minutes of play. During this time Wilson scored eight points.

Greenville now holds second place in the conference, having lost only three games, and whether they win or lose their last game they will continue this rating.

Miss Langston, who has faithfully and diligently served as coach for the girls, is to be congratulated, having molded a fine team from practically green material.

The summary: Greenville—Forwards: Hill, Elberidge (13), Dixon (6); Guards: Gaston, Hearne, Whitehurst. Substitutes: Crawford (3), Woolard.

Wilson—Forwards: Stewart (16), Dickinson (10), Woolard (2); Guards: Davis, Thompson, Blackhorn. Substitutes: Daniels (2), Barnes, and Homes.

Referee: Louise Briley.

HOOVER and ROOSEVELT Looking Back and Ahead At Their Problems

By BYRON PRICE (Chief of Bureau, The Associated Press, Washington)

Washington—(AP)—The historian of these eventful times will find few tasks so challenging as that of painting for posterity an unquestionably accurate picture of Herbert Hoover in the White House.

Even aside from the public issues which have embroiled his administration in controversy, there is a remarkable difference of opinion about the intrinsic characteristics of the man himself.

Many have seen him, sober-faced and silk-hatted, riding swiftly on some official business, obviously impatient to have it over with. Many have heard him speak, without attempt at the oratorical and with the manifest effort of a very tired man.

Others have seen him at his desk, remarkably alert and remarkably patient under the strain of great decisions; or amidst a small company before a blazing fire on the Rapidan; his face wreathed in smiles; his words those of the delightful conversationalist.

The inscrutability of Hoover is so contradictory within itself that it remains an enigma. Yet one or two characteristics will stand out beyond dispute.

The first of his qualities was an exceptionally intense respect for, and devotion to, the office of President. The second was an inborn sensitiveness.

Mr. Hoover's exertions of mind and body during the past four years have been almost beyond belief. His hours of work often have been from dawn to midnight. His week-ends in Virginia frequently have amounted to little more than a transfer of tedious, nerve-tearing tasks to a new setting.

A distinguished physician, intimate of Presidents, was asked how any man could bear the burdens of the Presidency with so little relaxation. He replied that almost no other man could; that to do so any human being would have to possess from birth an extraordinary faculty for intensive effort and quick recuperation.

Mr. Hoover's sensitiveness contributed greatly to making the presidency a place of constant trial for him. He felt keenly that many things which happened inside the White House were strictly private matters.

With careful forethought he concealed from public view many of the more human sides of his character and many of his acts of friendliness and charity.

Especially was that quality of studied human reticence noticeable in his speech-making. His public utterances nearly always were thoroughly matter-of-fact. His most entertaining speeches were delivered to smaller companies.

So in the memories of Washington the image of the Hoover who was revealed to all men rubs elbows with the image of the Hoover who refused to be revealed.

Washington—(AP)—Inspiring hope and sober reverie mingle strangely in the national psychology which greets Franklin D. Roosevelt at the threshold of the White House.

Unquestionably the keynote of his advent is one of jubilation, yet the poignant melody of his inaugural overture relieves but does not obscure the deep reverberations of a solemn undertone.

It has become trite to say that few Presidents have faced greater problems. Perhaps a better way of saying it would be to record that only three or four times has the American nation found its basic institutions on serious trial and that many believe this is one of the times.

How can government be returned to a basis of expenditure involving no disastrous tax load? How can prices and wages be restored, factories reopened, want and privation reduced? How can American prestige and American friendship abroad be re-established?

What to do about the currency? About the regulation of business? About the specter of bankruptcy? About prohibition.

All these questions, and others which might be added, are pretty deeply entangled with the anchors of American stability. When you discuss them, you will come finally to the question—As Mr. Roosevelt will come to it—how far wrong has the nation been in its efforts to apply to the present underlying lines of public policy laid down by the fathers of the republic?

Without attempting an all-inclusive analysis of the individual problems awaiting solution, it is interesting to note that most of them can be summarized in a single short word—DEBTS.

First, there is the question of the debt that is piling up in the United States treasury. For many months now the government has been living far beyond its income, and a restoration of sane financing should go a long way in promoting general business recovery.

Second, there is the matter of private debts, already at so acute a stage that many western farm communities have prevented by subterfuge or force the foreclosure of mortgages. The whole subject with its attendant dispute over banking and currency is sure to intrude itself with growing emphasis.

Finally, there are the war debts. It seems hardly too much to say that attempts to solve that problem will be the very spear-head of the American foreign policy.

If the incoming Democratic regime can contribute measurably toward lifting the world out of the morass of debt, that alone will fulfill in a great degree the high hopes it holds for the promised "new deal."

When a home has the convenient two-way closet that opens both into the dining room and the kitchen, it should be arranged to give maximum efficiency. The shelf space on a level with the kitchen sink should afford clear passage for dishes from one room to the other. It is best to have wooden doors on both sides to prevent undesirable glimpses of the kitchen while the dishes are being changed for courses.

To give a glazed surface to pastry and cookies, brush the top, before baked, with 1 tablespoon of egg yolk mixed with 1 tablespoon of cold milk.

Ready cooker cereals are improved in flavor and crispness if they are heated for several minutes just prior to serving.

Lay pieces of waxed paper under the dresser scarfs and if anything is spilled the dresser top is protected.

The cheaper cuts of meat contain as much nutriment as the more expensive cuts. The difference lies in the preparation.

Hollywood—(AP)—Bruce Cabot must be listed as another of the athletic gentlemen who incidentally and, in a measure, by accident are screen actors.

To any such program of athletic recreation as his when not at the studio a screen career can be little more than incidental. When he isn't swimming or playing tennis or golf or boxing he can be found at one of Hollywood's health institutes, taking a steam or a sun bath or playing handball. It goes on for hours a day and at the present pace Hollywood is going to have another George O'Brien on its hands.

"It isn't for health—it's fun," he says laconically, and stretches in the sun.

But he doesn't aspire to the O'Brien type of role. "I'd rather do other things," he says. "I've done almost everything there is to do, except act—and now I'm doing that—or trying to."

The child learns to talk not only by hearing and repeating speech, but also by watching the lips of the elders, at times even touching them to better appreciate their movements. That one can learn to speak through the sense of touch is demonstrated by the famous examples of Laura Bridgeman and Helen Keller.

Backwardness in speech may be due to a number of organic conditions, such, for example, as mental retardation, deafness, brain lesions and the like.

The child who is retarded in the development of speech or who suffers from speech defects therefore requires a careful physical and intelligence examination.

The most common disorder of speech is stuttering. Some have attributed it to a lack of co-ordination between the voice and articulation.

Others charge it to injury of the brain suffered during birth; still others believe that it follows when a left-handed child is forced to become right-handed.

Despite this divergence of opinion there is a strong consensus that fear and anxiety are largely responsible for stuttering.

In the treatment of stuttering the child receives re-education in breathing and articulation, but the stutterer is encouraged to free his mind from the idea of speech and to think of what he is saying rather than how he is saying it.

HELPS FOR HOUSEWIVES ONE-DISH DINNER URGED TO SAVE TIME AND MONEY

A whole dinner in one dish makes an inexpensive, time-saving meal, says the Bureau of Home Economics, which suggests: onion soup made with meat stock and served with toasted slices of bread and cheese; meat stew made with meat, a mixture of vegetables and some bread-stuff, such as dumplings; corn chowder with milk, potatoes, onion and salt pork.

These Shades Wash. For the housekeeper who dislikes draperies in the kitchen, due to the steamy atmosphere, the washable window shade is ideal. It is advisable to have a permanently finish cotton that can be wiped off with a damp cloth. The fabric can be bought by the yard and tacked to rollers already at the windows.

Body's Alkaline Reserve Vital. The tissues of the body are alkaline, and health demands the maintenance of an "alkaline reserve," say federal food experts. Eggs, meats and fish foods tend to reduce this reserve. Milk, fruits and vegetables increase it.

Vegetable Plate Popular. The "vegetable plate," which consists of three to five vegetables, has become popular. Care must be taken that it provides the same variety of flavors and textures as the more usual meal of vegetables and meat.

Two-Way Closet. When a home has the convenient two-way closet that opens both into the dining room and the kitchen, it should be arranged to give maximum efficiency. The shelf space on a level with the kitchen sink should afford clear passage for dishes from one room to the other. It is best to have wooden doors on both sides to prevent undesirable glimpses of the kitchen while the dishes are being changed for courses.

with road builders, sailing the seas as an ordinary seaman, serving as sparring partner for a boxer—(after a week he knocked out the fighter and was fired)—and the more prosaic business of stock-broking.

When that latter occupation disappeared he came to Hollywood and got into pictures. After a little extra work a tets opposite a well known stage actress provide more fortune for him than for her. He was placed under contract, but not she.

So far he has had better breaks than the average contract player. A good role in "The Roadhouse Murder Mystery," followed by the romantic lead opposite Fay Wray in "King Kong," then a part in "The Great Jasper," will keep him prominently on the screen for some time.

He was submerged in "King Kong" for 11 months—the time the actors worked—and doesn't think his part will do him much good except that it's in a "big" picture. "Nobody'll remember anyone in the picture except the big ape," he says.

His real name is Jacques De Bujae—ancestry French, Irish and Indian—and he's 26 years old.

Washington Daybook

By HERBERT PLUMMER

Washington—(AP)—The Republican old guard apparently is in fighting form again, doggedly determined to brook no challenge to its command.

At least that would seem to be inferred from the recent announcement of Dave Reed of Pennsylvania that he would ask the next Republican caucus to strike from the party rolls the names of those who supported Franklin D. Roosevelt for President.

"The old guard retreats but never surrenders."

There is a no more familiar axiom in the Republican political handbooks than this.

There have been times when the situation confronting the party was far more promising than it is now, that it chose to let the mantle of power slip from it rather than give ground to those insurgents within its ranks.

Back in 1912 Republicans permitted Theodore Roosevelt to split the party wide open rather than capitulate to his demands.

That move cost them both the presidency and control of Congress. But they knew what it meant. Party hopes were wrecked that year but at least the old guard controlled the wreckage.

Perhaps that is what Reed is thinking now. For the moment the party has been hard hit. He thinks it is a good time to get rid of those who deserted President Hoover in 1932 and start building anew.

It took eight years for the Republicans to recover from the wounds inflicted in 1912, but at the end of that time they came back with the smashing Harding landslide of 1920.

Then followed three consecutive Republican administrations, and the only thing in those 12 G.O.P. years to remind them of the tragedy of 1912 were the intra-party battles in the Senate.

If President Roosevelt dreams of incorporating the liberal wing of the Republican party within the national fold, Reed and the others here, the old guard perhaps are portent.

For some time in the Senate the Republican margin of control has been so slim that of necessity the party stalwarts have had to play along with their insurgent brethren. The necessity for that sort of thing now and in the immediate future has passed. Thus the movement for the old guard to clean house.

'Old Man Moon' Looks Ever Earthward, His Features Formed By Waterless 'Seas'

By ROBERT H. BAKER (Professor of Astronomy, University of Illinois)

Urbana, Ill.—(AP)—The "man in the moon" watches us always. Sometimes only one eye is visible. But his face is always toward the earth. No one has ever seen the back of his head.

What is the "man in the moon"? What hides his face in varying degrees during the month? The large dark spots which make the face of the "man in the moon" always is turned toward the earth, even though one "eye" only may be visible. The right eye is the Sea of Storms; his left, the Sea of Serenity and the Sea of Tranquility; his mouth, the Sea of Clouds.

of March 11, rising at nightfall almost directly in the east. The moon turns nearly the same face towards us always because it rotates on its axis in the same period that it revolves around the earth. Presumably powerful earth-tides have acted as a brake to reduce the moon's rotation to equality with its revolution.

Moon-tides are putting a brake on the earth's rotation in the same way; they are increasing the length of the day as much as a thousandth of a second in the course of a century.

March 3 showed the moon nearly at the quarter phase, with the sunrise line running straight across its disk. High in the south on that date above the V-shaped Hyades of Taurus, from night to night thereafter the moon is found farther east among the constellations. The sunrise line then bulges more and more toward the east, giving the moon the lopsided appearance which we call the gibbous phase.
