Body of Head of Naval Department of Aeronautics Being Taken to New Jersey; Recovery Made By the Daphne, One of Many Vessels Continuing Search For Those Lost In Wreck of Giant Airship

New York, April 10.—(AP)—Recovery of the body of Rear Admiral William A. Moffett, chief of the Naval Bureau of Aeronautics, who was lost with the Akron, was reported to naval headquarters today. The admiral's body was the fifth to be recovered from the sea when the airship Akron crashed on the Jersey coast last Tuesday. One member of the crew taken alive from the sea after the crash died on the rescue ship. There are only three survivors of the seventy-six men who sailed on the ship's last voyage. The wireless to district naval headquarters said the Admiral's body was recovered by the Daphne, one of the more than two dozen craft which have been searching since the crash of the Akron. A later message received here from the coast guard destroyer Seines said the body of Admiral Moffett was aboard that vessel and was being taken to Asbeston Inlet, New Jersey, where it was expected to arrive about 12:30 o'clock.

ROOSEVELT RETURNS FROM RAPIDAN CAMP

Washington, D. C., April 10.—(AP)—President Roosevelt returned to the White House at 6:30 p. m. today after a drive through Virginia to former President Hoover's camp on the Rapidan.

Taking his first full day off in more than a month, the President, a party approximating a dozen drove at a leisurely pace under a balmy sun to the rustic retreat on the Rapidan.

The party had luncheon at the mountain camp and drove over the new Skyland trail and down the mountains into the valley of Virginia again.

Mr. Roosevelt drove throughout the day in an open car. His return to Washington was slowed by heavy traffic.

The machine carrying Secretary Ickes crashed into another car near Falls Church, Virginia, but the only damage was a couple of broken fenders.

In addition to Mrs. Roosevelt and the Secretary of the Interior, John Roosevelt, son of the President, was among those who enjoyed the outing in the spring-like weather.

EXTORTION CAST TO FEDERAL JURY TODAY

Miami, Fla., April 10.—(AP)—A Federal grand jury meeting here tomorrow will consider the case of Clifford Clobridge, arrested recently on a charge of attempting to extort $50,000 from Col. Charles A. Lindbergh.

Clobridge contended a letter he sent to Lindbergh demanding $50,000 "or you know what will happen" was merely a plan to "get even" with his estranged wife and her family. The initials "L. B." which he signed to the letter were the initials of his sister-in-law, Clobridge said. The letter was turned over to New Jersey State police and then placed in the hands of Federal office inspectors. They traced it to Clobridge here and arrested him.

NEW CAMPAIGN ON IN CHINA

Manchukuoan Army Reported Making Another Drive On Chiwang-Tao

(By The Associated Press)
Close upon the foreign report from Tientsin, China, that a Manchukuoan army advancing into north China had been thrown back from Chinwang-Tao, came Japanese claims that it was advancing again on that city.

A general drive of the Chinese counter offense on the Japanese positions along the Great Wall was announced at Japanese military headquarters in Manchuria.

Japanese forces were attacked from all main passes along a two hundred miles from the Great Wall forming the southern border of Jehol. Despite Japanese war office disavowal of responsibility for Manchukuoan invasion of undisputed areas in Chinwang-Tao, a Shanghai dispatch said Japanese soldiers were sent to aid the Manchukuoans.

On that front the Chinese claimed they had recaptured Chimenchen last April 1 and Shanhaiwan taken January 3 by the Japanese was reported threatened.

The Japanese War Office said it was absurd to think the Japanese were moving on the cities of Peiping and Tientsin.

There are about 3,000 American, including 1,300 marines and soldiers, in the Peiping-Tientsin area.

Winnie Ruth Judd Calm As Execution Nears: Slayer's Serenity Unshaken By Waning Hopes

Winnie Ruth Judd, convicted slayer of Mrs. Agnes LeRoi, calmly awaits the date set for her execution April 21, at the Arizona state prison. Her serenity now is in contrast to her behavior at the time of her arrest (upper left) and to her anxiety as she sat in her cell shortly after (upper right.) Another picture shows her in the court room (lower left) in a mood more serious than that appearing in the photo (lower right) taken as the left the grand jury hearing.

State Prison, Florence, Arizona—Thirteen months in the shadow of the gallows have passed for Winnie Ruth Judd—a period of alternating hope and despair, resignation and hysterical fury—and have brought her closer to the fourth date set for her execution. Three times a date has been set for her to pay with her life for the murder of Agnes Ann LeRoi. Three times she has seen the noose pushed aside. Under sentence now to be hanged at dawn, Friday, April 21, only a request by the warden for an insanity hearing could save her. The blasting of virtually her last hope of life—commutation of sentence—has left her smiling, but matrons working in six-hour, sleepless shifts are watching her constantly. An attempt to cut her way to freedom by use of a smuggled saw failed. She then threatened to commit suicide, but the watchful guards have prevented this. As the end approaches she remains serene as to mystify prison authorities. Now she seems destined to become the second woman to be executed by the state of Arizona. The other was Mrs. Eva Dugan, hanged in 1930. "The blue-eyed, slim young woman who entered the prison soon after her 27th birthday was tried only for the slaying of Mrs. LeRoi. The sanely. An attempt to place herself on trial for killing Hedvig Samuelson, for the expressed purpose of relating her self-defense story before a jury, failed the day before the pardon and parole board decreed she must die. Superior Court Judge Howard C. Speakman dismissed the second murder information, holding it would be a waste of money to try her again. Three days after the women were slain, their bodies—Miss Samuelson's having been dismembered—were found, packed as baggage, in the Los Angeles railway station. A week later Mrs. Judd was arrested in a mortuary a block from the Los Angeles Hall of Justice. She had not been out of the city since bringing the bodies there from Phoenix. She went to trial in Phoenix in January, 1932, and three weeks later, at 9:30 p. m., of Feb. 8, a jury which had deliberated less than two hours found her guilty of murder in the first degree and named the death penalty. Placed in one of the iron-barred death cages, adjacent to the little gallow's room, she became violent, and shortly was removed to the women's quarters. There she was allowed more freedom and grew calmer for a time. Occasionally dressed in the dark blue frock she wore when the sentence of death was pronounced in the Phoenix court, she attended the prison chapel. Her prayers there, she declared, were only for her aged parents, the Rev. and Mrs. H. J. McKinnell, who came to Arizona from Darlington, Ind., to aid their daughter. The condemned woman's first real bitterness was displayed when the Arizona supreme court denied her a new trial. "I'm not a murderer!" she cried. "I fought for my life when Miss Samuelson came at me with a gun!" Three months later, with accompaniment of tears, she told the board of pardons and paroles the same thing, but to no avail.

Wind's Menace to Airship Worse Than Lightning: Weight-Shifting Gusts Threaten Fate Like Akron's

Storms that menace dirigibles like the ill-fated Akron hurl two chief weapons at them. Most dangerous are whipping gusts, in effect bringing about sudden and unbalanced weight increases which may snap an airship in two. Such gusts, traveling in opposite directions as indicated by the arrows above, would have this effect, according to well known laws of physics. The menace from lightning lies not so much in the possibility of fire as in the "hammer-blow" effect of the bolt on the ship's structure.

By HOWARD W. BLAKESLEE (Associated Press Science Editor)

New York—(AP)—Two laws of physics, one well known and applying to wind, the other little known and relating to lightning, account for many of the hazards which wreck free airships like the ill-fated Akron. The well known law states that acceleration multiplied by mass will give the forces at work on the frame of one of these ships when the wind hits it. The other declares that electricity has mass. When applied to lightning, this opens the possibility that lightning exercises a hammer-like power of beating on the ship's ribs. Physicists regard the wind forces as the more dangerous. What happens is suggested by the sensation when one suddenly becomes heavier upon starting up too abruptly in an elevator. This increase in weight is not an illusion. It is a reality for the man in the elevator, and for an airship freely floating in the air. It explains why wind can break a ship in two, or drive it out of control. The rate of acceleration used in this law of physics is the 32 feet per second of a body falling under pull of gravitation. If an upward current of air drives a dirigible upward at 64 feet a second, the acceleration is two times that of gravity. Multiply the ship's mass, which is her weight, by two and you have the strain. Momentarily she is a ship twice as heavy, with correspondingly increased strain on her frame. The Akron was several blocks long. Meteorologists believe that a craft of this length can stick her nose into an up or down gust while her tail is in comparatively quiet air. Then it might be possible almost literally to double momentarily the weight of one end of the ship. That end would tend to break off.

Worse still—through more remote according to meteorological possibilities—is a ship with nose and tail in violent gusts blowing in different directions. All aircraft are planned to stand such gusts. For airplanes the maximum stresses of this kind are well known, according to Dr. Alexander Gleim, of the Daniel Guggenheim School of Aeronautics of New York University. The planes are built to withstand up to two and a half times a normal acceleration by gusts. For the gusts that might rend a dirigible there is not so much evidence. So the big ships are designed with an even greater margin against gusts. For the lightning hazard a dirigible theoretically is about the safest thing that could be aloft. Its metal frame makes the ship one unit, so that there is no difference in potential between its ends, or other parts. Its aluminum and other metals are good conductors. Lightning either should pass through it through a lightning rod, without meeting much resistance, or its force be dispersed in traveling through the steel network. So physicists hold there is little fire hazard from lightning.

But lightning now is credited with having mass—that is, if enough could be collected and held still on very delicate scales, it would have weight. This mass is assumed to be slight. But due to the extremely high velocity, the small mass has a real physical punch. Enough, in physical theory, possibly to break some of a ship's ribs under unusual conditions. There would be some heating of metal thus broken. But physicists say the heating in that case might not be enough to cause fire. More likely would be a fire starting from broken up parts of the ship coming into contact with hot exhaust pipes.

SCOTTSBORO PRISONERS HEAVILY GUARDED

Rumors that a mob was plotting to lynch the nine negroes on trial at Decatur, Ala., for alleged attacks on two white girls, brought an order from the trial judge to national guardsmen on duty there to shoot at the first sign of trouble. The judge said more troops would be called if necessary. Some of the prisoners are shown being escorted to the courtroom under heavy guard. (Associated Press Photo)

Visitors for the afternoon were Mesdames L. A. Brock, Tom Ricks, Alice Galloway Gorman.

The New Bern Junior Woman's Club was given a cordial invitation to visit us on our next meeting. A committee for the Point System, composed of Miss Clara Moye, Miss Rose Hadley and Mrs. Marvin Suggs were elected.

The club voted to assist the senior club in the exposition that will be put on in the city the first week in May. A motion was also carried that all future meetings would have some music.

WASHINGTON HIGH TO PLAY LOCALS HERE TOMORROW

The baseball teams of the Greenville and Washington High Schools will play at the Third Street stadium tomorrow afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. These two teams always play their best games against each other and no exception is expected tomorrow.

Washington has an unusually fine team this year, and has uncovered a young pitcher by the name of Downs who has won every game he has pitched this year. He will be opposed by Roger Taylor, local ace. The game will be the regulation nine inning affair.

BIRTHDAY LUNCHEON. Stokes, April 8.—Mrs. John Whichard entertained the faculty of Stokes high school and members of the senior class at a birthday luncheon in honor of the 19th birthday of Leo Hawkins on Friday, April 7.

The room was effectively decorated in blue and white, the colors of the senior class.

At the close of the luncheon Z. E. Brinson, principal, presented Mr. Hawkins with a gift from the members of the faculty.

EASTER CORSAGES COMPLETE ENSEMBLE

Everybody wears flowers on Easter. Single blossoms grace men's buttonholes. Smart corsages complete feminine ensembles.

The modish thing in corsages this Easter is to select them with an eye to the accessories. Flowers need not match the color of the costume, but they should always harmonize with it. They may be a tint or shade of the same color, or they may be in direct contrast with it, so long as harmony is obtained.

Choosing the proper corsage may seem a trifle involved, but that is where a good florist fits into the picture. Tell us the shade of your Easter costume and we will be glad to aid you in selecting the proper corsage. Greenville Floral Company.—(Adv.)

My Beauty Hint

By RUTH GORDON (Stage Actress)

Oily skin is quite a problem to many women, and especially those who live in the smoke of a large city.

To prevent this I use a liquidified cleansing cream every night and every morning.

Then before applying powder, one should thoroughly massage the face with a lump of ice, thus closing the pores of the skin.

HARD SURFACING OF ROAD TO BEGIN SOON

Kinston, April 10.—Hard-surfacing of the Kinston-Dover road will be in full swing in a few days. Materials have arrived. The distance between the points is about nine miles. The Highway Commission is said to plan paving the road between Dover and Jasper to shorten the Central highway through Lenoir and Craven Counties. With completion of the Kinston-Dover road paved highways will enter this city from eight directions.

In northern Ohio about 10 per cent of the peach buds, enough to bear a moderate crop, survived the February-zero wave.

In a great white hare drive on the estate of Earl Cawdor, near Nairn, Scotland, 1,000 hares were killed and distributed to the unemployed.

Home Demonstration Clubs. Mrs. W. T. Page and Miss Martha Jolly were hostesses to the Red Oak Club Wednesday afternoon at their club house. Twenty-five were present for the meeting. The coat clinic was continued. Following the program, refreshments were served and games were enjoyed.

Health Program in Tarboro. The home agent attended the 4-H health program in Tarboro Saturday. A coronation program was given in the afternoon at which the Edgecombe county king and queen were crowned. About 3:00 the boys and girls were present for the day. The girls had their biscuit contest during the day.

Germany. The international mind is taboo. Pacifism is regarded as synonymous with treason. The uniform and the sword are officially stamped as the nation's most honored assets.

German goods, German art, German music, the German dance are rated higher than anything foreign. Fritz Busch, internationally known director of the Dresden Opera, was removed, because among other reasons, he opened the season with the Frenchman Bizet's opera "Carmen."

This trend of ideologically revamping has entrusted to a new ministry propaganda headed by Dr. Goebbels. His friends feel that the whole mental attitude of Germany will change quickly under his control of the radio, press, film, theater and foreign propaganda.

Majority Backs Overtun. Other dictators have had to impose their will by extra-legal means upon an unwilling majority. In Germany, 52 per cent of the people in the election of March 5 endorsed the Hitler government and the great majority of the communes a week later delivered a land-slide vote of approval.

With these majorities behind it, the Hitler-von Papen-Hugenberg cabinet obtained from the new Reichstag sweeping powers. For four years the government can do what wills, without asking anybody's permission. The Reichstag will convene occasionally, but only to "O. K." the acts of the government.

Whole Nation Changing. To understand what is going on it must be remembered that the revolution is not only a political one. It is also economic, social, racial and ideological.

On the political side, Germany has changed completely. Communists are hunked if they escape prison. Social-Democrats, once the mainstay of the republic, and thousands of Democrats and Catholic Centrists have been removed from public service. Only guaranteed Nationalists or Nazis can get public jobs.

All state governments are now Nazi controlled. Wherever an old Republican cabinet declined to resign voluntarily, it was ousted by decree or pressure and a Nazi commissioner appointed in its place.

To Limit Wealth. On the economic side, Germany is headed in the direction of a "staendestaat"—a state in which the various social interests are grouped according to callings or professions and the acquisition of capital is limited by the amount of useful social service its possession permits. Under this caste would vanti and all would work side by side, for the well-being of the nation.

Racially, the Hitler government has anti-Semitism as part of its official policy. Federal Minister Hermann Goering declared in a speech at Essen that he would not send police to protect Jewish stores.

Mississippi 4-H Clubs enrolled 40,187 boys and girls in 2,084 communities during 1932.

A 1565 Elizabethan salt cellar fetched the equivalent of about $3,400 when auctioned in London.

SALES TAX IS NOT NECESSARY

The matter of revenue will again come before the legislature tonight and there will be a continued effort in behalf of the sales tax, but again we say that there should be no sales tax to balance the budget except as a last resort and by a last resort we mean after every other source of taxation has been tapped. Despite the feeling on the part of some of the legislators that the sales tax is the only way out we still insist that the budget can be balanced without the sales tax if the hands of the powerful groups and interests could be removed from the throat of the legislature just long enough for the members to take a little sensible and honest action.

Here is now the budget could and should be balanced:

Place the kilowatt production tax on the power companies. South Carolina passed this tax two years ago when we declined to do it because we were afraid of the power companies, and as a result South Carolina today is collecting several hundred thousands annually from this source while we get nothing.

Repeal the law that now exempts stocks in foreign corporations from ad valorem taxes. There is no just reason why this form of property should not pay the same proportion of tax that any farm or other piece of real estate pays. Under the present plan of taxation foreign stocks pay only a 6 per cent tax on their earnings while real estate pays an ad valorem tax many times greater whether it earns for its owner or not. All this talk before the legislature that under the present plan holders of foreign stocks are paying more than they would under the ad valorem plan is just so much propaganda. If the holders of this kind of property did not feel that they were getting out lighter under the present law, why are they so opposed to and fighting the change?

Increased franchise rates on utilities and other large corporations that are making millions of dollars profits not only upon their legitimate investments but upon watered stocks as well.

If the above three sources do not afford enough added revenue to balance the budget, as we believe they will, then let there be a graduated luxury tax rather than a sales tax upon the necessities of life.

The White Cockatoo by Mignon G. Eberhart

SYNOPSIS: Sue Tally, an American girl, is the only guest. Jim Sundean finds interesting when he is marooned for a winter week in a summer hotel in Southern France. He distrusts the manager, Lovschiem, and finds the hotel itself an eerie place filled with distressing noises—most of them caused by the mistral, blowing relentlessly out of the north. Then Sundean is awakened from a doze by Sue Tally's pounding on his door. She has escaped an abductor; he calms her, and goes to the lobby for the key she had forgotten. The key is gone; returning she stumbles over a bloody corpse. Sue has disappeared; Lovschiem appears and is reluctant to call the police.

Chapter 7

SUNDEAN'S DANGER

I knew Lovschiem lied when he said he did not know the dead man. "You'd better call the police then," I said. Lovschiem, satisfied that I had accepted his word, was leaning over the man again. "How—look here. Someone's robbed him. Pockets emptied, nothing anywhere." His hands no longer shrank; they were instead ghoulishly eager in their search. It was as if Lovschiem expected to find something that had been overlooked. If so, he failed, for presently he looked at me again. This time his eyes were angry and little and vicious. He said: "Who are you?"

Later I was to ponder over that crazy inquiry. Then it enraged me; I was angry, shaken, tired, cold, and I was still in the grip of a nightmarish experience.

"You know very well who I am. If you are innocent of this affair, call the police at once. If you don't, I will keep your hands off that man!"

I had spoken too late. He had dragged out the knife and was holding it up into the stream of light so we both could see it. It was dark, and a slow drop was forming on it. But it wasn't a knife at all.

It was a small dagger like a toy sword. It was a toy sword, and I had seen one like it only a little before.

Lovschiem recognized it, too. He got heavily to his feet. I preceded him, however, into my room, and we both stood at the fireplace staring at the bronze clock. The little bronze soldier's gauntlet hand was empty, and the sword was in Lovschiem's fat hand. Or at least, I thought, a sword just like it.

But Lovschiem dispelled my sprouting hope of that at once. He said with just a gleam of ugly triumph:

There's only one like it in the house. No, Mr. Sundean, you killed him yourself. You were very stupid about it. More stupid than I should have believed of you, for you've the face of an intelligent man. But you killed him."

There are things that leave you so stunned that for a moment you feel numb—as if suspended in a void. The thing that was so unreal and made everything else unreal was his accusation.

"And you want me to call the police," he added, with what approached a smile.

It was still difficult to speak. But all at once things were real enough. A sudden memory had come to me with all the reviving influence of a stream of icy water. Sue Tally had stood there, almost where Lovschiem was now standing, holding that sword and running her pink fingers along its sharp edge and saying that it was like a dagger.

Then I had left her alone in the room. I had gone through the long corridors to the lobby, and from it I had seen her figure cross the light from my door and vanish into the darkness of the corridors. And immediately afterwards I had found a murdered man beside that very door, and he had been murdered with the dagger I had last seen in Sue Tally's fingers.

But the trouble was, I didn't know what to do. So I stood there looking at Lovschiem and said nothing.

A small satisfaction was that my look irritated Lovschiem and apparently made him uneasy. He said: "You Amerikans, you are all alike. How can anyone tell what you are thinking? Poker faces, that's what you call them. Now then, shall I call the police." There was only one thing to say.

"Call them at once." He was visibly disconcerted. He stared at me and then took another step toward me peering into my face.

"What are you?" he said again. Again, somehow, the question touched off my smouldering fury. I stepped quickly nearer.

"See here, Lovschiem, I told you once who I am! And that I didn't kill this man!"

He backed away a step or two and someone from the corridor gasped shrilly:

"What is it? For the love of God—" "Grethe—hush!" Lovschiem's voice smothered the woman's cry. I whirled.

It was a woman, now, kneeling by the murdered man. A woman in a yellow shawl whose fringes dropped from her shoulders. Her red hair was drawn in a great knot at the back of her neck.

Lovschiem, the dagger still held carefully between two fat fingers, left me and advanced quickly toward her. I followed him and saw her turn her horrified face up toward him and heard her gasp:

"So, you've killed him." By that time he had bent over her, and I could not see past his bulk. I could, however, hear his voice.

"He was found dead on the landing here. I do not know who he is. I am just going to call the police. This man with me found him." He turned to me: "My wife can go and telephone for the police, since you insist."

The red-haired woman, then, was Madame Lovschiem. I could see her now as she rose. She clutched the yellow shawl about her. The tight folds hugged her full breast and narrow waist and curving lips; even at the moment I was conscious, as a man is, of a kind of attraction about her.

In the very act of rising she had caught sight of the dagger with its ominous wet stain. Her shining eyes fastened on it, and widened, and held their gaze so fixedly that both Lovschiem and I looked at it, too. But she did not scream. She did not make any motion of right. She said finally:

"Lovschiem, you're a fool." (Copyright, 1933, Mignon G. Eberhart)

at least, in further drops in the already-depressed securities of some roads.

In other words, while some dependence is placed on monetary stimulants, the administration is staking most of the long-run effect of a legislative program which it hopes will go to the fundamentals of the case.

The Explanation It is not very surprising, therefore, that in spite of all the activity in Washington, the first month of the new regime saw commodity prices registering only moderate net gains, while stock and bond prices returned, after their initial flight, to about their previous levels.

A side from the beer and forest conservation projects, with their restricted application to the evils of the depression, the one major affirmative stroke of the month was the farm relief program. That program, as explained by one of its sponsors, is designed to operate like this:

The income of the farmer has declined about $7,000,000,000 from normal. If normal farm prices can be restored, the farmer will have $7,000,000,000 more to spend.

That amount, turned into the channels of trade, will furnish employment for 7,000,000 men. It might constitute the one jar that would break the whole log-chain of the depression.

But it will be seen that several months will be required to measure the benefits of that process. The same is true of the public works program.

So "Why Keep It Up?" So, when the skeptics, thinking of the Presidential campaign of 1936, ask "Can he keep it up?" the Roosevelt strategists reply: "He won't have to."

The philosophy behind that is that Mr. Roosevelt now is establishing himself firmly as the responsible leader of the nation; that if times get appreciably better in six months, or a year, or two years, he need not worry about 1936; and that if times do not get better, nothing would have saved him anyway.

The intense activity of the new administration at Washington has surprised many people making it doubly strange that the biggest surprise of all has arisen from an almost complete lack of activity in the one matter of Federal patronage.

Had the public mind been less occupied with other things, the long delay in filling appointive jobs with Democrats' doubtless would be one of the prime news subjects of the day. As matters stand, the undercurrent of the November victory is only now beginning to come into the open.

House Democrats, able to restrain themselves no longer under the prod of would-be office-holders among their constituents, have appointed a committee to "confer" with the President.

Party leaders outside of Congress likewise are converging on Washington in increasing number and arguing their cases with increasing emphasis.

Soon or late something will have to be done about this, but the belief of the best-informed still is that it won't be soon.

For Mr. Roosevelt knows his politics, and hardly is expected to give away hastily the advantage which present circumstances afford him.

Under the Plum Tree It is easy enough to visualize the situation from the viewpoint of the Congressman or local political leader. Twelve years have passed since the Democracy has tasted the fruit of the plum tree. In that time overwhelming political obligations have accumulated on the shoulders of party candidates and managers. Furthermore jobs being scarce as they are, the clamor for redemption of these obligations is exceedingly loud.

But what happens? Patronage seekers, high and low, are told to see Postmaster General Farley in his official capacity as democratic national chairman. Jovial and sympathetic, Farley smiles a smile that seems to speak volumes and say he'll take up as soon as ever the President gets a moment.

A few penetrate the seclusion of the office of Louis Howe, political secretary at the White House, but the answer there is the same.

And the President himself just jongleur: "Oysters and wine at 2 a. m., 2 a. m., 2 a. m."

The Romantic Touch In the merry circles, the usual tendency at that hour was not wine, or warbling thereof, but a doggerel, bayed at those within earshot:

Around her neck She wore a purple locket... She wore it for her lover Who was far, far away.

Which would lead the singing boys into even a more romantic mood, and they would oblige (or annoy, if not in good voice) with "I'd Love to Live in Loveland With a Girl Like You" or "Oh, You Great Big, Beautiful Doll."

With a couple of more tankards to whet their German accent, the singing boys could be depended upon for a Rhineland number or two, best known being "Ach, Du Lieber Augustin" and "Ein Prost."

Farm Mortgage Plan Seeks Lower Interest Charge

Washington, D. C.—Direct effort to reduce the principal and interest of the farmer's mortgage debt is envisaged in the administration project to refinance this indebtedness.

The story, taking a hypothetical case, is something like this: Back in 1919 John Smith, farmer, mortgaged his then $20,000 farm for $10,000, and promised to pay $700 a year interest on it.

Both the insurance company which made the loan and Smith figured they had made a fair deal. Prices were high, they reasoned, certainly would not drop enough to endanger either party. Neither were taxes unduly burdensome.

But prices did collapse. In 1921 they were half as high as in 1919. Smith was in some difficulty, but felt there probably would be a recovery—and by 1925 prices had moved up about 20 per cent.

It was only a breathing spell. Prices started down, moved up in the prosperous year of 1928 and 1929, slumped in 1930 slipped in 1931, to bogged in 1932 dipped in 1933.

The mortgage got heavier and heavier as Smith's income from the things he sold declined. Up to 1930 he had been able by dint of careful economy to keep the interest paid and to reduce the mortgage to $8,500.

He was in danger of losing his farm. He could not fight the down sweep of the price curve.

He felt that he was not responsible for the price drop, nor for taxes which were taking an increasing share of his diminished income. With his neighbors he organized to prevent foreclosure sales, demanded government relief.

Farm Value Away Off In many cases his farm had virtually no sale value, whatever its appraised worth might be. The insurance company did not wish to foreclose, probably could not sell the farm for the face of the mortgage if he did. The huge investment of the insurance company and other lenders in farm real estate was frozen.

Now an unfreezing process is proposed to help both sides of the mortgage agreement. First, the government proposes to restrict farm production to raise prices; secondly, to have Federal Land Banks take over Smith's farm mortgage and to give the insurance company bonds in exchange.

Smith, the insurance company and the Federal Land Bank will get together. The Federal Land Bank may propose to give the insurance company an $8,000 bond, paying 4 per cent, of the $8,500 mortgage. The government will guarantee payment of interest. The bank will take over the mortgage, lower the interest rate to not more than 4-1/2 per cent, and agree not to press Smith.

This, in effect, and simply illustrated, is what the mortgage provision of the farm bill proposes. The debt is reduced to manageable proportions; the insurance company has a liquid mortgage; foreclosure of farmer's homes is stopped.

The total farm mortgage debt is about $8,500,000. Some of this would be sealed down both as to principal and interest as above described; other portions of it would be used to purchase first mortgages outright on the same sealing down principle.

The larger effect of the plan will be to unfreeze billions in credits, now yielding no interest and having no market value.

Hollywood Sites By ROBBIN COONS Hollywood—(AP)—It's still worthy of Hollywood comment when a screen bogyman throws off his ghostly wraps and steps out as a comedian.

Bela Lugosi was an actor of parts before he became "Dracula," but he has been the "vampire" ever since, and most of his screen roles have been variations of his first major hit in pictures.

But for "International House" he has been cast in a strictly comedy part, as one of Peggy Hopkins Joyce's several ex-husbands. It's

There were various tunes that dated back long before, such as "The Little Brown Jug" and "Champagne Charlie" whose clarion call was "good for any game at night, Champagne Charlie is my name."

Free Lunch Extolled Then, too, there was "The Free Lunch Cadets," written by no less a person than John Philip Sousa, extolling the gratis lunch counters in Philadelphia beer gardens, where he then sawed away at a violin in an orchestra prior to his days as bandmaster and "The Star and Stripes Forever."

Many of the songs were composed to praise the various brands of beer and wine, and there was one, obviously written by a strong-stomached character comedy, and not slapstick, but for one he doesn't have to stalk around, frighten women and children, and make himself generally a terror.

"Edie Sutherland," the director, seems to be the first to have considered me an actor instead of just "Dracula," Lugosi remarks with a smile.

"I always was an actor. I played all kinds of parts before I played 'Dracula,' and I still am an actor. 'Nevertheless, I was surprised when Sutherland asked me about the role because usually I don't get called for a picture unless it has a devil or a monster in it."

Lugosi is content to leave horror roles to other players who may want them, and hopes this departure is the beginning of a new career for him in which he can qualify (in studio eyes as well as his own) for variety in roles.

Women who find themselves in a weak, run-down condition can hardly expect to be free from troublesome, painful symptoms. TAR HEEL NINE AWAY ON TRIP. NETTERS BUSY

Chapel Hill, N. C., April 10.—The Carolina baseball team will continue its Northern tour with games at Washington and Lee today and at Virginia Tuesday, while Carolina's big guns in tennis will try their hand with some of the best players in the country beginning at Pinehurst today.

The Tar Heels have entered their ten leading freshman and their eleven best varsity players. Wilmer and Lenoir Wright, their first two varsity players, also participated in an exhibition match at Pinehurst yesterday, with Frank K. Shields and J. Gilbert Hall.

The only home event the first of the week will be a baseball game between the Carolina Freshmen and Durham High here Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock. The Freshmen will play Oak Ridge here Thursday afternoon, and the varsity will meet V. P. I. men will play Oak Ridge here Thursday afternoon, and the varsity will meet V. P. I. here Friday afternoon at the same times.

Carolina's varsity entries in the North-South Tournament, according to their present rankings, are Wilmer Hines, Lenoir Wright, Rickey Willis, Dave Morgan, Harvey Harwood, Walter Lewtan, John Dillard, Minor, Harley Shuford, Lawrence Jones and John M. Glenn.

The freshman entries, in order of their ranking, are Bernard Friedman, Hunter Lott, Marcus Lynch, Sid Sobel, Jimmy Johnston, Vincent Bankney, Zeb Linker, Dave Taylor, Howard Hoyt, and B. Williams.

SPORT SLANTS By ALAN GOULD

As the baseball season gets under way, it becomes quite apparent that young Master Jerome Herman Dean, barring some sudden break-down or fit of temperament, is destined to become one of the great right-hand flingers of the current major league array.

Dean will be a sensation, this "arm" writes one of my scouts who inspected the St. Louis Cardinals with an eagle eye. "He has everything, including a rubber arm that doesn't know the meaning of overwork."

"He has earned a lot in the past two seasons, since he first came up for a trial with the Cardinals. I should say he has gotten over his freshman habits and is ready to settle down to being the best right-hander in the National League, if not in baseball."

All of which explains why the Giants, among others, sought long and earnestly to pry Dean away from the Cardinals during the winter trading sessions. The only hitch was that Messrs. Sam Breadon and Branch Rickey happened to appreciate just as much his fellow magnates the rare value of Dean, not only as a pitcher but as a box-office attraction.

May Beat Matty's Mark

Dean led the National League in strike-outs last year, his first full season in the majors, with a total of 191. He appeared in forty-six games. As compared with the record of the king of American League pitchers, Robert Moses Grove, who fanned 188 in forty-four games.

The National League still has a less lively ball than the American, using a thicker covering, and this contribution to the cause of the pitching craft may enable Dean to set a new National League record for strikeouts.

He still has quite a way to go before touching the modern league record of 267 strikeouts, made by Christy Mathewson in 1903, but it should be within the reach of the St. Louis youngster. Dazzy Vance, who led the National League for seven successive years in strikeouts, threatened Matty's record by fanning 262 batters in 1924.

Whiffed 303 At Houston

Dean, like the great Grove, found the attempt to throw "em past" major leaguers a vastly different proposition from fooling the minor league strikers. Dean, with Houston in 1931, struck out 303 men in Texas League company.

Grove never had less than 200 strikeouts while doing his stuff as a regular pitcher for the Baltimore Orioles. The famous southpaw whiffed 330 in 1923 for his high mark. His best effort in the majors is 214 strikeouts, made in 1930.

The weight of letters sent by air from England last year exceeded all previous records, amounting to 64 tons, compared with 52 1-2 tons in 1931.

North Dakota boys and girls have raised at least 20,000 baby trees for planting in memorial groves.
