Cleveland, O., April 21.—(AP)—The United States airship Macon, making her maiden flight, flew over Cleveland airport at 7:30 a. m. today, an hour and half after she went aloft at Akron, thirty-nine miles away.

Several hundred persons braved the cold crisp morning air to see the ship go into the air on a series of test flights preliminary to her acceptance by the Navy.

The Macon's stern was freed and water ballast was dropped to level her off to the proper buoyancy just before Captain Aler H. Drexel gave the command to send her aloft.

The silver ship, almost a duplicate of the Akron which crashed at sea with the loss of 73 lives, this morning headed into the northeast 35 minutes after Captain Drexel gave the signal to walk the 785-foot long vessel out of her dock.

Among those on board were officials of the Navy board of inspection and R. Karl Arnstein, designer of the Akron and Macon. Altogether, there were 105 persons aboard.

After the Macon had been aloft an hour and a half, Captain Drexel sent a radio message dismissing the ground crew until 5 p. m., indicating the ship would remain up until that hour.

RECESS TAKEN BY GRAND JURY

Jurors Finish Work On Bills and Adjourn Until Next Monday Morning

The six-month grand jury which has been passing on bills at this time of criminal court recessed yesterday afternoon until Monday morning, when it will again delve energetically into the remainder of its business.

The jury has passed on all presentments when the recess was decided upon so when it returns to work Monday morning the only thing to be considered, as far as known, is the regular inspection of county offices and other properties.

The most important task in the winding up of activities for the term, however, is the actual work of compiling the report to be presented to Judge Henry A. Grady.

REPUBLICANS ASSAIL TENN. VALLEY PLAN

Minority Report of House Military Committee Raps New Program

Washington, D. C., April 21.—(AP)—President Roosevelt's Tennessee Valley program was assailed today by the House Military Committee Republicans as "too vastly sweeping and vague in its content that it threatens dangerously to incline bonded indebtedness of the nation to a point of impairing credit."

The criticism was made in the minority report to the House signed by Representative Ramsley and Cochrane of Pennsylvania; Gos of Connecticut; Crater of Wyoming; and McLean of New Jersey.

The committee's other two Republicans, Gaines of Michigan and Christianson of Minnesota, did not sign the bill.

BLUE MOLD IS RAGING HERE

Big Increase in Plant Bed Disease Reported in County Last Few Days

The Blue Mold, mildew tobacco plant bed disease, which last year resulted in a 50 per cent decrease of acreage in this section of the State, again threatened to reach out its skeleton hand today and take a heavy toll this year.

The disease was reported as raging in some sections of the county by K. W. Cobb, supervisor of the Greenville tobacco market, who said unfavorable weather conditions the last several days had caused a pronounced increase of the menace.

The mold was reported in widely separate areas last week and it looked as if the county might escape a severe infection, but the chance took place rapidly during the last week resulting in hundreds of beds suffering from the disease.

ST. FRANCIS RIVER LEVEE BREAKS IN MO.

Flood Waters Inundated 2,400 Acres Of Land in Region Of Kenneth

Kenneth, Mo., April 21.—(AP)—The St. Francis River levee gave way about three miles east of here today flooding an area of 2,400 acres.

Another levy prevented the water from inundating a large area reaching as far south as Senath, Mo.

The levy broke a moment after a national guardman had waded over it in the course of his patrol duties.

In a short time the break widened to ninety feet and engineers said it would probably be 250 feet by noon.

The region inundated is low farm land and stock and farm implements were removed.

MAYOR SEEKS RE-ELECTION

P. C. Flanagan First To Toss His Hat Into Political Ring in This City

R. C. Flanagan, mayor of Greenville the last two years today broke the ice in the political pot by announcing his candidacy for re-election for the next two years, and from now on the old pot is expected to sputter a merry tune.

The election will be held on the first Monday in May when a mayor and five members of the Board of Aldermen will be chosen.

Until the mayor's announcement today not a single candidate had filed either for election or re-election, but it was expected action in this connection would get in full blast by next week.

Owing to the death of J. L. Hassel, alderman from the Second Ward, and the resignation of Closs Hearne in the First Ward, these seats must be filled in the forthcoming election or by appointment by the board.

Mayor Flanagan is basing his second campaign on the record of his achievements the last two years. His administration has been marked by such economy that the city has been able to meet all of its obligations. This was accomplished in the fact of the most serious national financial earthquakes in the history of the nation and world.

Bull Movement Still On New York Stock Market

New York, April 21.—(AP)—The bull movement on the stock market was kept rolling by large scale buying of the railroad shares in the early dealings today.

The demand for other issues slackened but carrier issue shares were taken in blocks of $1 to $5 a share.

Scattering losses appeared in industrials and utilities as a heavy wave of profit taking appeared. Trading was at a furious pace and the ticker fell behind floor transactions.

Blocks of 1,000 to 2,100 of industrials and utilities favorites were plentiful during the opening.

New York cotton futures showed an overnight gain of 75 to 90 cents a bale.

CRAZED MAN SLAYS COUPLE AND HIMSELF

Farmer of Near Lincolnton Ends One Man Reign of Terror With Pistol

Lincolnton, N. C., April 21.—(AP)—The end of a reign of terror in a small community near here came early today with the finding of the body of C. C. Putnam, 66-year-old farmer, who apparently crazed from a long argument of a piece of land, shot to death Mr. and Mrs. Ben Dellinger and then committed suicide.

S. A. Warlick, coroner, said he and Sheriff A. F. Reinhardt had investigated the shooting and that no inquest would be held. Warlick said witnesses bore out the fact that Putnam had slain the Dellingers and that a pistol found in the farmer's hand indicated he had taken his own life.

The investigators said they learned that Putnam had terrorized his neighbors for a long time, threatening several persons as an outgrowth of an argument over the ownership of a strip of land.

Late News Flashes

Today in the Legislature.
Raleigh, April 21.—(AP)—The biennial revenue bill containing a two per cent general sales tax was sent to the Senate finance committee this afternoon for study and probably revision as beer legislation again asserted itself in the center of the legislative stage.

The money raising bill passed by the House yesterday was re-referred to committee without comment from the Senate floor. After brief explanation the Senate passed on second reading the substitute beer regulatory act setting up machinery for licensing and taxing retail and wholesale trade in beer in the state when the beverage becomes legal at midnight April 30, both House and Senate rushed through another bill to legalize transportation into the state immediately of 3.2 per cent alcoholic beverages. The measure clarified the earlier law intended to allow wholesalers to get stocks of beer to sell when it becomes legal at midnight April 30. The Senate passed and sent to (Continued on Page Four)

HAIL STRIKES BETHEL AREA

Considerable Damage Also Reported From Storm in Chicod Township

Hail, preceded by a torrential downpour of rain, visited the Bethel and Chicod communities last night, causing considerable damage to tobacco plant beds and other young plant life. It was indicated by reports reaching the city today.

Although the hail at Bethel was not as severe as that reported in Chicod and in the southern part of this and adjacent counties the night before, it was sufficiently heavy to cause grave concern among growers as to the safety of their crops.

Fields were flooded for miles around by the deluge preceding and following the hail. It was said, providing an additional threat to young plants just beginning to poke their heads out of the ground for the forthcoming harvest season.

In Chicod Township tobacco beds over a ten mile area were reported ruined. So heavy was the hail that berries were stripped from trees with other forms of vegetation suffering likewise.

The storm was described as more severe than the night before which had been reported over a wide area including all adjoining counties (Continued on Page Four)

NEGRO KILLER SENT TO ROADS

Leroy Pollard of Ayden, Given From Five to Seven Years In Court Here

Convicted on a charge of murder, Leroy Pollard, Ayden negro, was sentenced to not less than five nor more than seven years on the roads by Judge Henry A. Grady of Clinton, in yesterday's session of criminal Superior court.

Pollard was charged with slaying Jesse Uzelle, colored, during an altercation at Ayden about a year ago. He said Uzelle advanced upon him with a knife and that he shot in self-defense.

Only a short time was required in disposing of the case and the jury consumed little time in reaching a decision.

Several other cases were disposed of after completion of the Beaman arson case shortly before the noon hour which resulted in a verdict of (Continued on Page Four)

All applications receiving favorable consideration, the mayor stated, must be willing to sign an agreement that $25 a month shall be paid to the dependents. They will receive pay at the rate of $1.00 a day and food and clothing.

Equal justice to all is the only kind of justice that any court should mete out and Judge Grady has declared for this kind of justice.

THE SALES TAX NOT NECESSARY

With the House having passed the sales tax it now goes to the Senate where the majority of that body has the reputation of having been for this form of taxation all along in preference to deriving the needed revenues from those sources that are making millions of dollars in profits and are well able during this emergency to help to a bigger extent to carry the state's burdens. In view of the Senate's reputation along this line what the final outcome will be is problematical but there are those who believe that many of the present revenue producing sections of the bill including tax on the power companies will be removed and that the burdens of the poor still further increased by a higher sales tax than that even voted in the House.

We have contended all along that the passage of a sales tax without first taxing all other available sources to the limit is increasing the burdens of the poor to the benefit of the rich and privileged classes, and in our stand on this matter we have not changed. Believing that the great majority of the people in this county agree with us in this stand we have urged the Pitt legislators from the start to take a similar stand in this matter.

Here's the Pitt vote on the provisions of the revenue bill so far:

Both Flanagan and Edwards in the House voted for the kilowatt tax on power companies, the Everette-White amendment to tax stock in foreign corporations on a basis of its market value rather than the book value, and for the Flanagan amendment that would recapture from the railroads, telegraph and telephone companies a portion of their savings through the decreased ad valorem taxes. Then on the general sales tax Edwards voted against the measure on all three read-

The White Cockatoo

by Mignon G. Eberhart

SYNOPSIS: Jim Sundean just has been released from the French jail into which he had been thrown as a murder suspect. Sundean's release is caused by David Lorn whom Sundean does not like. But Lorn was sent by Sue Tally, and Sundean both likes and trusts her. Lorn's parting shot is that the dead man was poisoned. Then Sundean sees Sue, who promises to join him later for a walk, but confesses she is in danger. There is a knock—but Madame Grethe, wife of the hotel manager, enters, not Sue.

Chapter 17

CURIOUS CALLER

Madame entered as I held the door open. She looked rather nice! She wore again the clinging, coppery-green silk gown, and her red hair shone under the light. Gold hoops swung at her ears; her face was white and soft and her lips heavily rouged.

The white cockatoo sat on her shoulder; his crest was flared handsomely upward, and he was twisting his head this way and that in an inquisitive but faintly reproving manner.

I shouldn't have been at all surprised if he'd said to me conversationally: "So this is where the murder was. Tut, tut."

"Am I disturbing you?" said Madame Grethe. Her green eyes were shining, and her manner was very pleasant.

"Not at all," I said, and then, as she gave every indication of having come merely to pay a social call, I added: "Won't you sit down?"

She moved in a graceful, leisurely manner to the chair opposite me and sat down; the cockatoo clung to her shoulder and made an admonitory remark which was aimed apparently at me.

"Pucci, Pucci," she said in a caressing voice. "I am sorry about your being arrested, Mr. Sundean. My husband and I regret it very much."

There was a shade of mockery in her shining eyes.

"At any rate," I said, "it didn't last long."

"No. Apparently not. I hope that is all you will hear of the affair."

"You hope is shared, Madame."

For the instant I employed the ghost of Marcel's shrug, a useful gesture which I was growing to admire very much. I irritated her. Her eyes lit for a moment, then she dropped smooth lids over them, lifted one rather large but soft and white hand to Pucci's neck, caressed him for a moment, and then glanced about the room.

"How the wind blows!" she said. "Doesn't it annoy you at night? Surely there is a loose shutter somewhere near."

"One of those on the window, there."

"I must tell Marcel to repair the catch. Although—shouldn't you like another room, Mr. Sundean?"

"I'm quite all right here, thank you," I answered. "I wondered what time it was."

"Come, come, Mr. Sundean, admit that you'd be happier in another room. One not so far from the rest of us. One not so near—" She moved one supple hand in a quick gesture toward the corridor.

But I was firm, mainly because she insisted, for I had no reason to like my present room, heaven knew! And I was beginning to wish she would leave. It would soon be time for Sue's promised arrival.

"Oh very well, then," said Madame at last rather sharply. "On your own head be it. Mr. Sundean—" she leaned suddenly forward, and Pucci toppled, caught his balance, and gave a hoarse cluck of disapproval—"why are you here?" she asked almost in a whisper, her green eyes shining into mine.

"I came to meet a friend," I said. "Will you have a cigarette?"

"You are evasive, Mr. Sundean," she said in a less caressing way than she had previously employed.

"Evasive? You ask me why I have come to this hotel. I tell you, to meet a friend, which is the truth."

I smiled at her.

"At such a time, Mr. Sundean, one must ask questions of unidentified strangers."

"No doubt," I said pleasantly. "What's it all about, Madame? An attempt on my life and a murder at my threshold? That's more than coincidence. Are you so determined to make me leave?"

little astonished to see how my words affected her. She leaned quietly back in the chair again, but her face had gone rather sharp and set, and I did not like the look of her eyes back of their darkened eyelashes. It was a good 60 seconds before she spoke, and in the little interval Pucci cast me a reproving glance and then pushed his wide bill against Grethe's red hair and flared his yellow crest.

"I don't understand you, Mr. Sundean," she said at last. "Surely you don't think the murder of last night had connection with you?"

It was clear, of course, that there was something evil going on in the old hotel. But I think that, until that very moment, I had not felt so definitely the presence of widening and entangling currents.

She did not, I think, detect the course of my thoughts, although her green gaze was very sharp. I said quietly but more cautiously:

"No, I don't think anything of the kind. While I may not be a particularly welcome guest, still I don't think anyone would go to the trouble of murdering a man in order to get rid of me. By the way—who was the murdered man?"

"I don't know," she said in a tight voice; narrowed eyes watched my face. "Do you?"

"I? Absurd! You know that! But another question, Madame." In my turn I leaned toward her. "Why were you anxious to keep me from arrest last night?"

Her smooth lids went down again, but not before I'd caught a look that warned me. She rose, and I rose, too, naturally, and the move brought her very close to me. So near that I could feel the warmth of her body.

Her lips were parted a little, and her eyes, lifted again to mine, were very bright and shining.

"It should not be difficult to find the answer for that," she said softly. "She would be pliant and warm and exciting in my arms. I wondered fleetingly how soon I could replace the faintly triumphant look I'd caught in her eyes with something quite different."

I tossed my cigarette into the fire. I took the cockatoo from her shoulder and set him on the chair near and bent over her mouth.

But it waited for me, and I straightened suddenly without touching it or her.

"Madame," I said pleasantly, "is more than kind. Madame is also beautiful. The cockatoo is eating fringe of the chair."

He was actually doing just that, in a heaven inspired moment but with a very dubious look. He took another bite without eagerness but philosophically, as if in scientific pursuit one must put up with a poor-tasting bite now and then, and Madame Grethe looked at me.

I was rather interested to note that there was nothing but a kind of faintly surprised curiosity in her gaze. Then she laughed a little, turned and picked up the cockatoo—he resisted out of pure devilry, stretching out his neck for more fringe and squalling, but her hands were firm about him—and she faced me again still smiling.

"And Monsieur," she said, "is a very reckless young man. Good-night."

I opened the door for her. She held out her hand to me, still smiling, and I think genuinely amused, and not in the least angry. I bowed very low over her hand, and she turned gracefully into the corridor, and I closed the door behind her and took a long breath and hoped she wouldn't meet Sue. At least until she was at a considerable distance from my room.

I was thinking of Sue when I heard her knock on the door. As I opened it she was looking rather fixedly at the spot on the corridor floor where the dead man had hurried. She looked small and quiet and frightened, and I took her hand and pulled her quickly into the room and closed the door.

"Were the corridors creepy?" I said. "Come over to the fire."

She shivered and said yes rather breathlessly and sat down in the chair I had just left.

"It's very queer," said Sue. "But for the last week or two I've been ridiculously nervous about going through these half-dark corridors. I keep feeling that there's someone coming along behind me. Or looking out of closed doors."

The postponement was made on motion of the defense counsel which said it had not had time to prepare its case. Counsel said, however, the three defendants would plead not guilty.

Those accused are Ralph Dill, 25; Norman Dill, 28, and R. P. Myers, 32-year-old mechanic.

ITALY TUNES SHIPS, MEN FOR FLIGHT TO CHICAGO

Above is the first authorized photograph of a model 10 Savoia-Marchetti 55 seaplane, two dozen of which will start a mass flight next month from Italy to the Century of Progress Exposition in Chicago. They will follow the route shown on the map and will be headed by General Italo Balbo, Minister of Aviation.

Orbetello, Italy.—(AP)—A life like that of a bunch of pugilists in strict training is led here by the one hundred aviators who will man twenty-four Italian seaplanes on General Italo Balbo's group flight to Chicago late in May.

Men and machines are being tuned to the highest possible point of efficiency so that both human and mechanical units may be without flaw when the moment comes from their leader to signal "contact."

One by one the model 10 Savoia-Marchetti planes, beautiful specimens of workmanship, are being turned over to the pilots, navigators, mechanics and wireless operators who will form their crews.

The ships embody several late improvements over the planes used on Balbo's mass flight to Brazil in 1931. Each is driven by two Isotta-Fraschini motors developing 1,600 horsepower and erected tandem over the single wing. The front motor drives a three-bladed propeller affair.

The maximum speed is 175 miles an hour. At the cruising rate of 150 m.p.h. each machine can carry 2,200 pounds more than 2,500 miles.

The men selected for the trip are waded off from all distracting contacts. They eat at a training table, may each have just one pint of wine a day and are limited on their smoking.

Sports, such as swimming, tennis, fencing, water polo and skiing, are on the daily program, along with flying and intensive class-room work in aerial subjects, alternated with two hours in the air daily. Visitors are taboo.

Already "in the pink," every man jack of the expedition is certain that he soon will be sauntering through the fair grounds on Chicago's lake front.

Louisiana State University lost but two men by graduation from the 1932 football team, which, coached by Capt. Lawrence (Biff) Jones, was a threat in the Southern Conference championship race.

Madison Square Garden is so huge, it was so crowded, and the throng which came to worship Kreisler, Rachmaninoff and Walter Damrosch was so seriously intent.

When Kreisler came to one of those brief pauses in a Beethoven rendition, there was just one ill-timed handclap from one lone fellow right smack in the middle of the auditor-

Sleeping School New Yorkers may think they're pretty smart, making fun of the small town folk. But at least the boys at the flag stations along the railroad tracks don't have to have somebody show 'em how to go to bed in a sleeping car berth.

New Yorkers do. In the two gigantic terminals, Grand Central and Pennsylvania Station, there are schools for prospective passengers with all the upper and lower berth equipment set up for classes in sleeping car behavior.

Day coaches aren't any mystery to the big town wise guys. So many of them commute, riding back and forth daily, between their suburban homes and business. But take it from A. J. Grant, himself a native New Yorker and in charge of the school at Grand Central, there are plenty of people in the big city who must be told what a sleeper is all about. They don't go out to see the world as often as other small town cousins.

Grant, who was a sleeping car conductor for years before he assumed his pedagogical duties, says that many of his pupils come from the city's foreign population—people who never saw anything like an American sleeper back home.

Other pupils are chronic travelers. To be sure, who just want to keep up with the latest improvements in the cars—such as the stationary, individual ladders for upper berths, and the spring mattresses (with 497 springs!) substituted for the old hair mattresses.

HOLLYWOOD SIGHTS & SOUNDS

By ROBBIN COONS Hollywood—(AP)—Hard-working fellows are these film comedians, and never believe otherwise.

In a very real sense they live by their wits, for their stock in trade is their ability to get laughs with their every appearance.

The Marx Brothers—never a dull moment with them around—work at it seriously. Besides two regular writers who work on their films, there have been as many as a dozen others called in to contribute to the conglomeration of nonsense of which Marxian movies are composed.

El Brendel still clips faithfully, adding to an ancient and growing collection of "gag possibilities." His scrap book dates back to his vaudeville days, and he is forever trying to think up a new joke which will serve in a picture. The comedian is usually given more leeway in the matter of "writing his own part" than other actors.

And how the comedians work! Charles Ruggles had a scene in a new musical in which, trying to break up a romance on shipboard, he offers the porter $50 to separate the pair.

"For $50," the answer comes back, "I'd separate the Siamese twins!"

"That 'gag,' of course, is meant to get the laugh. Ruggles naturally felt he ought to have one, too. But a 'topper' for that one? Where, oh where? Ruggles thought and thought for a whole week. And then it was time to shoot; the scene.

"—the Siamese twins!" concluded the porter. And Ruggles, waiting a moment for the "laughter lapse," came back with "but—but they wouldn't be any good that way!"

Spring's conventional urge is to romance, but this season the screen is going biographical with a vengeance.

George Arliss is getting fairly steep-shouldered from portraying "Villette." Edwards G. Robinson is preparing to picture "The Kingfish," and the late Frederick G. Bonfils, Denver publisher, is also to become a screen character.

And "Queen Christina" of Sweden will be recreated by Garbo whenever she arrives—and they are saying it will be around the first of May.

SEVENTH BIRTHDAY TODAY FOR PRINCESS ELIZABETH

Princess Elizabeth Alexandra Mary, who may some day reign as England's queen, has a birthday today with seven candles on the festive cake. Here are two photos of the young lady, the daughter of the Duke and Duchess of York.

By OSCAR LEIDING
London.—(AP)—There were seven candles on a very special cake today for the most important little person of her age and sex in the British Empire.

For Princess Elizabeth Alexandra Mary, who some day may reign as England's second Queen Elizabeth, has reached another milestone in her life.

Spring days have given London the opportunity of seeing just what a growing lady the little golden-haired princess is, for the brilliant sunshine has brought out not only the crocuses and daffodils in Hyde Park, but also the daughter of the Duke and Duchess of York and her wee sister, Princess Margaret Rose.

Marching with dignity beside the "pram" containing her sister, she adopts the role of protectress. Sometimes, too, these daily outings mean rides behind a stately pair of sleek horses.

In her nursery schoolroom at the home of her parents, 145 Piccadilly just across the street and Green Park from Buckingham Palace, she has regular lessons.

She reads and writes with ease, and her curriculum includes French, English, geography and simple arithmetic.

But she has other interests. The winter was marked by regular lessons in ice-skating with a brand-new pair of skates bought by her mother.

Her birthday, as has been the custom, was spent at Windsor, where her grandparents, the king and queen, established residence in the castle before Easter and near which, in the Royal Lodge in the Great Park, her mother and father spend a great deal of time.

Everyone went home tired but happy.

We are so glad that Edgar Allen, one of the characters in our play has returned from Richmond, Va., where he went to consult a physician. He is very much better and if nothing serious develops from now on, he will be able to keep his part in the play.

Mrs. H. P. Tyson and daughter, Mabel Joy, spent last Monday with her mother, Mrs. R. N. Nichols at Arthur.

Everything is in readiness for the play "The Wild Oats Boy," which is to be April 28th at Arthur school. Everyone knows his part and indications are that we will give a very enjoyable performance. Mr. Bill Manning will entertain us between one act with a negro sermon which is a scream from beginning to end. We are hoping to have a big crowd present.

You May Get $10.00 Free.

Belgium Preserves Waterloo
Brussels.—(AP)—A Socialist project to repeal the law of 1914 forbidding new buildings on the battlefield of Waterloo was tabled in the Chamber of Deputies. The motion stated that the British committee charged with preservation of the site hindered inhabitants of the district by holding the government to the letter of the law.

Jim Leonard, a lanky fullback on the Notre Dame team last year, probably will be tried out at guard in spring training.

Talks to Parents

By Alice Judson Peale

One of the problems which must be faced by the parent who entertains attitudes unorthodox in the neighborhood in which he happens to live is the danger of making his children "different" from their school-mates, so different that their lives will be made miserable through being treated by their school-mates as if they did not belong.

A child whose parents have encouraged him to think for himself aroused in him an interest in something besides baseball and automobiles, felt that the form of manners mattered less than a spirit of consideration and exposed him to liberal ideas of all sorts, is made to feel by his school fellows that he is odd and pays the price of this seeming strangeness by missing out on the comradeship necessary for growing children.

Often this difficulty leads parents to feel that it is wiser to let their children run with the herd and acquire other standards later on if they can.

Leaving aside the question of whether or not such a way out is possible (for children tend to accept their parents' standards), perhaps such a sacrifice of better values is not necessary if from the beginning the child learns through his parents' conduct that it is possible to hold ideas different from those of other people without, except on rare occasions, having to fight about them, that one may conform externally without giving up one's own opinion.

Meanwhile there is no reason why he should not be interested in doing what other children do and having as much fun with them as possible in play with them, merely keeping to himself the opinions and interests for which he knows they have no tolerance.

SAFETY AND FREEDOM
Safety and freedom are two apparently conflicting elements, but both are necessary in child training.

The child needs to be safeguarded so that he may feel secure and gather self-confidence. He needs freedom so that he may grow up to the full and independent use of his abilities.

At the beginning, the helpless child needs to be wholly protected, but even at that time he needs freedom to kick, to turn in his crib, to look, to reach to grasp and to crawl, one after another as he is able to do these things.

Probably the run-about stage is the most difficult. For then, although the child is still so ignorant of his environment that he is likely to hurt himself or break something at any moment he is in an especially experimental frame of mind which should be encouraged so that daily he will try to do things that he has never done before.

This stage requires constant watchfulness. There must be all possible freedom, but mother must stand ready to avert disaster at the psychological moment. Thus when the child first attempts the stairs some one must be near to catch him if he starts to fall.

As the child passes beyond the need of constant physical supervision, he still needs guidance in learning to get on with others in making decisions in learning to accept the consequences of his own behavior. Every step in this learning means that he has earned and can use just that much more freedom in the future.

This freedom, though gradually given, means that the child makes mistakes and often gets into trouble that could have been avoided, but it is only by such experience that he will acquire at last the independence and judgment that will see him through the complexities of adult life.

JUDE PLAYS BEAMAN AND JURY

through the years that I have been on the bench—sometimes in face of strenuous protest from the wealthy and powerful, who thought they had some peculiar rights in the court room; sometimes in the face of threats of political annihilation; and sometimes I have been severely criticised because I could see no distinction between classes, creeds, denominations, or political parties, when it came to meeting out justice in the court house. I have always had the highest respect for the verdicts of juries. I was taught at the law school, and by my father when I was a child, that the petty jury was one of the main bulwarks of liberty—the saving barrier between good and evil, between righteousness and crime, between law and order on the one hand, and anarchy on the other. I have always believed, and I still believe that the jury system is the only means through which our American ideals can be perpetuated; but my faith in this system as a means for the ascertainment of truth has some times been sorely shaken and disturbed.

"I have said this much in order to explain what I am going to say in reference to this case against Thomas E. Beaman in which he was acquitted by the jury; and I am going to say this because I think it is my duty to do so.

"Here is a man who, according to the uncontradicted evidence, purchased two policies of insurance on his furniture, one on the 16th for $70.00, and one on the 19th for $1,000.00. He has never paid the premiums on either policy, on Saturday night, five days after the issuance of the first policy, and two days after the issuance of the second policy, he purchased a gallon of kerosene oil from a merchant here in Greenville; there was nothing peculiar or suspicious about that particular fact; he had an oil cook stove in his house, and it was reasonable to suppose that he was going to use the oil for cooking purposes; sometime about midnight, his nearest neighbor heard a man walking around in the Beaman residence, saw the shades all pulled down, saw a light flashing about in the rooms; it is not denied that Beaman was in the house at that time; nobody else had a key to the house; nobody else could have been in the house; at 3:30 o'clock the building burst into flames; the police and the firemen of the city rush to the scene; they attempted to enter the building; they found that the front door and the rear door had both been nailed up from the inside; they entered through the window; fumes of kerosene oil was so stifling that the officers had to back out and flush the building with air before they could enter; there was not a drop of kerosene oil in the stove tank, or in the can that Beaman used when he went to the merchant's store late that afternoon; the only oil found in the residence was that which had been poured on some bagging, a burlap bag, and an old sweater, and at each place where these saturated clothes were found, a separate and distinct fire had been started; matches were found on the floor, oil was found on the sleeve of the defendant's overalls; his bedroom, where he was supposed to sleep, was closed, and there was no sign of fire or smoke in that room; the defendant had run across to a neighbor's house, where he pretended to be overcome with smoke, when he had not been in a room at all where there was any fire or smoke, unless he went out of his bedroom; all of the electric fuses in the house were intact; all of the wires were separated from 12 to 18 inches, so that it was physically impossible for the fire to have originated from a short circuit; the defendant was in the house; the doors were locked and nailed; the windows were all down; it was impossible for any other person to have been in the house at the time.

There was a fire that was calculated to burn up a whole city block; to destroy human life, and but for the fine work of the City Fire Department and police officers, there is no telling what disaster might have befallen the town of Greenville.

"There was not a person in this court house, who heard the evidence in the case that did not know to a moral certainty that Beaman set fire to the house in which he lived in order to collect insurance for which he had not even paid the premiums. He was too much of a subject himself to a cross examination by the Solicitor; but submitted himself, with apparent cheerfulness, to the verdict of a jury, which he seems to have foreseen would be in his favor.

"And now, he comes into court and admits that he has been stealing money from the credulous Insurance Companies that entrusted him with their business. All that I can say is that there has been a serious miscarriage of justice; this man is a wolf in sheep's clothing; he has paraded about the state in the livery of God; doing the works of the devil; he ought to be in the penitentiary; but I am powerless to impose any penalty upon him when jurors refuse to be governed by evidence which is clear, positive, convincing and not even denied by the party on trial.

"In the present case, I understand that there has been an agreement between the state and the defendant, at the urgent solicitation of the private prosecution, that the defendant be allowed to repay the money that he has stolen, and that no sentence be imposed upon him. I am permitting this course to be pursued; but, at the same time, it is against my own sense of justice, and I do so with great reluctance.

"There ought to be no compromise with evil; a preacher who steals his employer's money ought, of course, to pay it back; but he ought also to be punished just as any plain, ordinary citizen would be punished; and the fact that he is parading about the world as a Minister of God ought to add fuel to the fire of his just condemnation.

"I direct the Clerk, in deference to the agreement made, to enter the judgment which has been prepared.

fire with favorable weather conditions. Realizing the danger confronting them, hundreds of farmers, their wives and children squatted over plant beds today attempting to weed out the diseased plants. The task was a grueling one with the ground wet and cold from unseasonable temperatures, and work was carried on at the risk of the health of the planters and their families.

Prior to the advent of the mold, the county had one of the best collections of plant beds in years, leaders of the tobacco industry stated, and it appeared as if no trouble would be incurred from the pronounced shortage this year. Developments of the last few days, however, have caused grave concern among the growers and others associated with the industry, and with clearing weather, plant bed operations will be redoubled as the planters attempt to check the inroads of the disease.

MUSIC MEET SET FOR CITY

next week. Last year Greenville tied with the city of Lenoir for first place and the student body had rather win first place in this music contest this year than have any other accomplishment to their credit. Greenville will enter the following: Band, orchestra, mixed chorus, boys' glee club, girls' glee club, boys' quartet composed of Preston Smith, James Dees, Eugene Hamric and Ben Herring; girls' trio consisting of Helen Sawyer, Martha Scoville and Carolyn Hamric; unchanged boys' voice, Harvey Deal; clarinet solo, Harold Sugg; trombone solo, Ben Herring; bass solo, James Savage; tenor solo, D. T. Beaman; baritone solo, James Dees; alto solo, Heien Phelps; soprano solo, Carolyn Hamric.

south of Greenville. The precipitation was accompanied by lower temperatures, which set in the night before and held away over this part of the State all yesterday and last night. The chilly weather provided another menace to growers who today looked anxiously over their fields awaiting the coming of improved weather conditions to determine the full extent of the damage.

According to reports reaching the city yesterday, hail in the east was so severe that plant beds were ruined in some areas. Hail the size of a hen's egg fell in some territories and was said to have been several inches deep.

The storm reached from Ballard's Cross Roads in the west to and beyond Ayden in the South, moving over into Greene and Lenoir counties with probably more damage than in Pitt.

Although it is impossible to estimate the extent of the damage, it was believed it would reach into thousands of dollars and probably cause an acute shortage of plants in some localities.

The following were found not guilty: Charlie Carraway, disorderly conduct.

Wes Hardy, colored, assault.

Plans Shaping Rapidly Here For Community Fair

Plans are rapidly being completed for the Community Fair and Spring Festival which opens on the night of May 1 in the Star Warehouse. The building is being beautifully decorated, and when completed will look like a Japanese garden.

New York Cotton

New York, April 21.—(AP)—Cotton futures opened steady, fifteen to eighteen points higher on renewed general buying and higher Liverpool cables.

Opening demand was sufficient to send prices of May up to 7.52 and October to 7.89, or about 18 to 21 points net higher.

The more urgent buying was supplied by realizing or Southern selling and prices receded partially.

At the end of the first half hour May was selling around 7.42 and October 7.60, or 9 to 10 points from the best.

Reactions carried the market off to 7.33 for May and 7.88 for October, or within a few points of yesterday's close.

The decline, however, brought in some renewed commission house buying and the market at midday was steady at a net advance of 10 to 14 points.

Stock Market

STOCKS: New York, April 21.—(AP)—Financial markets halted to take their bearings today after a violent gust of the past two sessions.

Stocks with the exception of rails and gold mining issues, weakened under profit taking.

The decline in the dollar exchange was checked as fair speculators abroad took profit and commodity markets turned hesitant, although further firmness appeared in copper and sugar.

The rails were bid up briskly in the early trading, but gains of about two to five points in such issues as New York Central, Pennsylvania, Southern Pacific, Northern Pacific and Baltimore and Ohio were roughly half lost.

Utilities were weak with North America, Public Service of New Jersey and Consolidated Gas were off two to four points.

The gold mining group such as Homestake advanced 1/2 and McIntyre three points.

Slivers and Coppers, such as U. S. Smelting and Kennecott lost a point or two.

Oils held fairly well. U. S. Steel was about steady. American Telephone and American Sugar, American Can, American Sugar, Sears and Roebuck and Myers lost a point or two.

The late tone was heavy. The turnover was about 4,900,000 shares.

MacDonald Arrives in U. S.

New York, April 21.—(AP)—Arriving in America to help out the campaign for a world war against what he called "unmerited poverty," Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald said today that "America's abandonment of the gold standard affects England not at all so far as I am concerned."

In a brief interview on the liner Berengia at quarantine before he was taken ashore on the City of Macon, MacDonald asked if he was disappointed in President Roosevelt's action in respect to the gold standard.

"No, gracious, no," he replied, adding that he really was without information continuing this development and from the bare fact that the country had for the time being abandoned the gold standard.

"It only brings to light," he said "the distress of the world and that is what your president and I are trying to face I hope to face it successfully."

Banks Set Farm Refinancing Pace in Emergency Bill

By FRANK I. WELLER (Associated Press Farm Editor)

Washington.—(AP)—The federal land banks, pioneers in the farm credit field since 1917, proceed again as pacemakers under authority of the emergency farm mortgage bill passed by the House.

During the next two years the bill would permit offering of a maximum of $2,000,000,000 of 4 per cent bonds, the proceeds of which would be lent at 4 1/2 per cent interest on first mortgage security.

The banks, located in 12 key areas, now have $1,283,000,000 of grass loans outstanding to farmers at an average of 6 1/2 per cent interest against which they have $1,147,407,420 of bonds outstanding to the public at approximately 4 1/2 per cent interest.

United to an interest spread of 1 per cent, the land bank's rate to the farm borrower has been gauged by the rate of interest it had to offer to sell its bonds. The government guarantees the interest on the $2,000,000,000 issue and the bonds are tax free.

The hope is to attract sufficient investment at 4 per cent to enable the banks to reduce their interest charges to 4 1/2 per cent for the next five years to present borrowers and for the next two years to new borrowers. No payment on principal will be required for five years. Most loans are expected to be amortized over a period of 30 years.

Adding to the prestige of the federal land banks, the new farm credit administration governed by Henry Morgenthau, Jr., operates entirely through the board of directors for the land and federal intermediate credit banks.

A farmer may go direct to his federal land bank for a new loan or to refinance an old mortgage, but it is required that, where they exist he apply to the national farm loan association which appraises his property and lends him the money. It has borrowed from the land bank on his mortgage. These associations are expected to be the farmers' chief point of contact with the farm credit administration in refinancing and scaling down first mortgage debt.

Side by side with the land banks and one to each federal land bank district are the federal intermediate credit banks which make commodity loans to cooperative farm marketing associations and crop production loans to farmers applying through local farm credit corporations and livestock loan companies.

What effect Milton's blindness, which became serious when he was about 35 years of age, had upon his poetry would be hard to determine. But from the descriptions he left concerning his difficulty and the progressive loss of his vision, we can diagnose his affliction with a degree of certainty.

As a boy Milton was so studious that from the age of twelve he scarcely ever went from his lessons to bed before midnight. Milton declared that this studiousness was "the first cause of injury to my eyes."

Despite certain difficulties Milton was not seriously troubled with his vision until he reached the age of 35. His first indication of trouble appeared when his sight became weak and dull. His eyes pained him. When he looked at a candle he saw an "iris" around it.

Subsequently he lost all vision in the left part of his left eye. Three years later he lost all sight in both eyes.

Milton suffered from hereditary and progressive near-sightedness. Milton's father read without spectacles at the age of 84.

Since the natural tendency of the eye is to become far-sighted as the individual grows older, it may be assumed that the elder Milton's far-sightedness compensated for the early near-sightedness, thus making it possible for him in his old age to read without spectacles.

Milton's studiousness in his youth and his over-work contributed to his difficulties, causing ultimately a detachment of the retina or sensitive inner layer of the eyeball, with the consequent loss of vision.

The present-day sufferer of congenital and progressive myopia is more fortunate than Milton with respect to the opportunities available for relief of the condition. The early diagnosis of this condition, the conservation of the eye through moderation in use, and the wearing of proper glasses, lessen the burden borne by the defective eyes and help to protect the near-sighted from premature blindness.
