Russia Orders 'Embargo' On British Goods

Action May Herald An Economic War Between The Two Governments

STEPS TAKEN AGAINST TRADE OF BEAMAN IN LOCAL CHURCH ON HIGH SEAS

Decree of Soviet Government Will Become Effective Wednesday Unless England Calls Off Her Proposed Eighty Percent Embargo; Controversy Result of Trial of Two British Engineers; Russia May Release Men For Deportation, Averting the Crisis

Moscow, U. S. R., April 22.—(AP)—Soviet Russia, striking back at Great Britain, ordered a complete embargo on British goods and drastic measures against shipping of the mistress of the sea.

Heralding the possible approach of an economic war of historic importance, the Soviet embargo will become effective on Wednesday if the British government goes through with its plan to involve an 8 per cent embargo on Russian goods.

The decree will remain in effect as announced, as long as the British embargo continues.

Earlier foreign counsel here had expressed expectation that the two British engineers whose imprisonment on charges of sabotage and espionage started the trade war would be released and deported in a week.

A formal petition that the sentences be canceled or commuted to deportation was presented by their Russian attorney and was before the Central Executive Committee today. It was considered likely that if the men are released, England will call off the embargo, thus ending the trade controversy.

Two stores entered here. Thieves entered two stores here last night but the only thing missing was a small amount of cigarettes and fifty cents in cash taken from Johnston's store on the upper end of Dickinson avenue.

Police were investigating the theft today and hoped to be able to round up the thieves in the near future through evidence which they were able to obtain shortly after the entrance to the two buildings.

A glass was smashed in the front door of the Home Grocery Company and it was believed the place would have been robbed had not a policeman making his rounds routed the robber or robbers. The attempt to enter the store was reported shortly after 11 o'clock.

"Due to the fact that much publicity has appeared in the columns of local and state papers pertaining to the case of Thomas E. Beaman, I am making this statement that the public may be correctly informed as to his relationship with our church."

"Mr. Beaman came to this town, accepting the care of our church, highly recommended, and his services for several months was highly commendable, a fact generally admitted within and without. The last few months of his term as pastor various and sundry rumors appeared."

The attention of the Ministerial Character Committee of the Central Conference was advised of rumors of un-Christian conduct on the part of Mr. Beaman. The case was referred to the local church for a hearing and its constitutional way investigated thoroughly the rumors and found them unfounded.

President Roosevelt Takes Steps Also to Notify Other Nations of America's Reason For Going Off Gold Standard; Hopes to Boost Commodity Prices; British Experts Take Part in Today's Discussions

Washington, D. C., April 22.—(AP)—President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald of Great Britain resumed discussions on how to help the world shortly before 11 o'clock today.

Seated in the oval room of the White House the two statesmen took up where they left off last night—both having calls postponed until they have more time to discuss problems centering about the stabilization of international currencies and other subjects on the agenda of the World Economic Conference.

Prior to resumption of deliberations, the British leader left the White House for breakfast at the Embassy and a conference with his advisory staff. Then he studied his papers briefly.

The American economic expert at the State Department meanwhile was progressing with studies for the President.

Aside from giving Mr. MacDonald this country's views in person, Mr. Roosevelt took steps to notify London, Berlin, Paris and Rome governments that the United States' action in going off the gold standard had for its aim world-wide improvement of commodity prices and not any special American advantage.

The message went to the American embassies in the foreign capitals. Sir Ronald Lindsay, British Ambassador, and staff of experts from Great Britain, participated in today's White House discussions.

UP TO EXPECTATIONS

The Senate committee lived up to expectations yesterday when it took from the House revenue bill those sections that would place a kilowatt tax on the power companies and recapture from the larger corporations and utilities a portion of the tax savings that they would derive from the reduced ad valorem scale.

When the whole thing is boiled down to the last analysis about the only saving that the small land owner is going to show is the amount that has been cut off in the appropriations bill. It is not a matter of reducing the little man's taxes. It's just taking the same amount or more out of him, but getting it a few cents at a time in the hope that he will not realize that he is being taxed.

It is to be hoped that when the revenue bill reaches the floor of the Senate that body will restore the power and corporation tax sections to the measure and seek out other sources of revenue instead of a sales tax, but in any event we urge Senator Corey to accept no compromise and under no circumstances vote for the sales tax. No doubt he

The White Cockatoo by Mignon G. Eberhart

SYNOPSIS: Jim Sundeau has been released from jail by the French police, but not freed of the suspicion that perhaps, after all, he had murdered the unidentified Russian found in the 'corridor' outside his hotel room. Sue Talley, whom Sundeau should suspect, from the evidence, has sent David Lorn to aid him.

Chapter 18

SUE'S FEAR

Sue took a long breath. Her hands had met and were faintly pink against the black velvet of the coat she wore—the same coat she'd worn the previous night, and the same slender scarlet slippers with their shining silver heels were there on the rug with the flickering lights on them too.

"I've come to let you know—what I know. Because you see—she hesitated—"you see, I'm afraid that the man was killed—"she hesitated again, and then the words came out in a little rush—"because of me!" she said amazingly and looked at me again.

"Because of you!" Sue nodded. "It's terrible, isn't it?" she said. "Are you sure you want to hear?" "But don't be frightened. Don't look as if you were blaming yourself. Let's talk about it coolly and sensibly."

Her cheeks grew pink. "I'm being sensible," she said indignantly. "But it is dreadful. I shall never forget how he—" she stopped herself abruptly and went on: "I'm not frightened. And I'm not silly and nervous or nothing."

"I know that," I said hastily. And I did know it. There was courage in the very lift of her head on her slender white neck.

"Tell me anything you wish, and don't feel that you are burdening me with your trouble. As a matter of fact I'm in a rather unpleasant sort of fix myself, and I've got to get myself out of it. And while I've got notions in plenty about all this business, there are few things I know definitely. And I thought, of course, that your—experience of last night

"Abduction," she said firmly. "Yes. That it was likely the murder somehow concerned it. Otherwise one would be expecting too much of confidence."

"Very well," she said. "I'll have no more scruples, then. But it's a rather difficult story, and it has to do with things that one does not ordinarily tell—strangers—"

"That one does not ordinarily tell friends. I don't know where to begin."

"Tell me why you were abducted," I said, liking the word friends. "Do you know why?"

"Oh, yes," she said at once. "I was abducted because of something I possess." She laughed rather sadly and continued: "I haven't any money. But I've got something that's worth, roughly, about five millions."

"Dollars, I mean?" I believed her. I was a little stunned, but I believed every word she'd said.

"The amazing thing about it was that I believed it in spite of voice which was saying inside me: 'That's right. Believe her. She'll say next that she's got some of the Russian Crown jewels and that a gang of Bolsheviks are after her and them. And you'll believe that too.'"

"In that case," I said, "you'd better put it in a safe place."

"You don't believe me," she said quietly. "Yes, I do. I don't want to, but I do. I know that every word you've said is the truth."

"And after I've gone," she said very quietly, "after I've gone, you'll wonder how you came to credit it for a moment. Well, I can quite understand it."

"You don't understand in the least," I said brusquely. "I offered her a cigarette, lighted one myself at her nod, and threw the match toward the fire and said: 'All right. What next? As I say, you'd better put it in a safe place, wherever it is.'"

"Oh, it's in a safe place," she said. "And actually I've only got half of it—what I haven't is worth a cent all by itself. But you see—this is the way of it. Mr. Sundeau, I'm going to start really at the beginning. I'll make it as brief as I can make it, for it isn't a pleasant story."

"My mother, as I told you, died here last year. My father, in America, died some months ago, too. They had been estranged for years—since I was three years old. My mother had lived here and there, and I've always been with my mother. That was one of the agreements. My brother remained with my father. He was four years older than I when our parents separated.

ed the most difficult part of the story—"my mother was an extraordinary person, Mr. Sundeau. I didn't know—and it doesn't concern this, why they separated, but whatever the reason was, my mother held it more important than anything else in the world. More important even than that I should ever see my father."

"You mean to say you never saw him again?" "Yes," she said quietly. "I never saw him again. My mother was very bitter and remained so. My brother was to stay with my father. I with my mother. My mother had a small income, but during her illness we were obliged to use up most of the capital."

"She refused to the last to hold any communication with my father or brother; it was not easy for her to do that—but she was—she had extraordinary command over herself." She paused thoughtfully and then continued in a brisker tone:

"At any rate, my father was a wealthy man when he died. He wanted me to have half his estate—to share it with Francis—that's my brother. And—and this, of course, is the kernel of the affair—when my mother went away he gave me a—small—"

She hesitated and glanced at me and said: "I'm not to tell anyone what was exactly. And, anyway, it doesn't matter, because it has no intrinsic value, it's only its significance that counts. I had part and my brother had part, and probably there are no others identical with those we have in the world. You see, of course, what it was for."

"Identification," I said. "Yes. My mother being what she was, my father knew that she would take steps to lose us from any possible connection with him. And that's just what she did. We went under various names, I think, for a while, though I don't remember very much of that; all I remember about those days is the continual going here and there."

"Well—the point is that my father didn't keep in touch with us—my mother was determined that he should not. After I reached an age to notice things we used our own name, of course, and I knew the whole story. Mother had not been well, and I felt closer to her than to my father. Then she—died."

"She paused again, and I put another small log on the fire and gave her a little time."

"She gave me, of course, an envelope with her marriage certificate and my birth certificate and various things of that sort in it. And last she told me to find my father. After a time I wrote: he was dying."

"Francis, my brother, replied. He said there would be the matter of identification. It seems that my father had finally advertised and they had had a number of letters from girls who said they were Sue Talley. He said that birth and marriage certificates could be faked, but that if I were really his sister there would be one means of identification."

"I knew, of course, what he meant. But I wrote in as guarded a fashion as he had written, saying only that I had it and not what it was. Then my father died; there was business for Francis to see to. Francis sent Mr. Lorn—the detective, you know—to see me. He evidently reported that I appeared to be actually Sue Talley. And Francis—" She smiled a little wryly. "Perhaps I'd better read you the letter Mr. Lorn brought me from Francis."

"She unbuttoned her velvet coat. Under it was some kind of black frock through which there were glimpses of white. She reached under the laces and brought out a letter. Then she leaned over and held the letter toward me."

A Washington Day Book

By HERBERT PLUMMER. Washington, D. C.—"Cotton Ed" Smith, the stocky, thin-voiced veteran Senator from South Carolina, has fought many battles for agriculture in his quarter of a century of service in the Senate, but the one he is now waging promises to be the crowning one of his career—"

Upon his shoulders rests the responsibility of seeing that President Roosevelt's far-reaching plan to rescue agriculture gets through the difficult Senate gantlet."

For years Senator Ellison D. Smith has been a recognized congressional authority on cotton.

What Senator Glass, of Virginia, is to banking legislation in the Senate, Smith is to cotton. It is said around Washington that no legislation affecting this commodity has gotten through Congress in the last twenty years without evidence of his handiwork.

On New Ground. But now as chairman of the Senate's Agriculture Committee, he admits he is treating unfamiliar ground in trying to push through the administration's farm bill.

When he arose the first day the bill was under consideration to explain the various features, one Senator facetiously inquired whether he thought he was able to give an explanation that all the Senators could understand.

"No," replied Smith, as the Senate laughed. "I'll just read the bill and tell what it makes an assault with intent to do."

TRIO OF BARRYMORES ON SCREEN AT STATE

Together on the screen for the first time, John, Ethel and Lionel Barrymore will be seen at the State Monday and Tuesday in "Rasputin" gripping and historical screen drama of Russia's mad monk.

vide (only Borah of Idaho outranks him). Smith has built his whole Senate career around agricultural legislation and allied subjects.

He's a farmer himself. Down in South Carolina he operates a large cotton plantation. When he is at home he superintends it personally. While he is in Washington an elderly sister, whom he describes as the best farmer and business man he ever knew, does the job.

A Cotton Foundation. Cotton gave him his start in politics. It has had much to do with having him elected five consecutive times to the Senate.

He was an organizer of the Southern Cotton Association and acquired such a widespread acquaintance in South Carolina that he was able to defeat a large field of opponents for the Senatorship.

A broad-shouldered, gruff-looking man in appearance, he is one of the most genial of Senators. He has a pronounced Southern accent, and his voice—almost a tenor—makes his speeches and conversation sound almost whimsical.

He is fond of interjecting Latin words and expressions in his speeches. Along with "Cotton Ed" this has won for him another sobriquet among his colleagues as "Ipsa Facto" Smith.

Talks To Parents

EXPERIENCE FOR BABY. By Alice Judson Peale. The ideal schedule of today's baby is a well ordered one.

If it is followed, no fond visiting relative is allowed to wake him out of a sound sleep to admire him. He is not passed around from lap to lap. He lives a life serene, regular and comfortable.

In this comparatively new realization of the value of routine and the danger of over-stimulation one need of wholesome babyhood is sometimes forgotten—the need for an increasing variety of experience.

To the new-born baby virtually every experience not connected with the functioning of his own body is unpleasant.

Bit by bit he learns to respond with pleasure to the sounds, the physical contacts, which at first caused him to cry. This increasing acceptance of things outside himself is the beginning of his adjustment to the strange new world.

The baby who during his waking hours lies all too undisturbed and impassive in his crib or carriage, standing always in exactly the same spot week in, week out, is being insufficiently afforded new impressions.

All sorts of little changes can make life sufficiently stimulating to a baby: Turning his crib so that he has a new view, putting within his reach one at a time, all sorts of objects with which he can become acquainted, a piece of stiff paper that crinkles and rattles under his touch, buttons that slide on a stout securely tied string, a carrot, a wooden clothes-pin, varieties of brightly colored rattles that he can pass easily from one hand to the other.

Bringing him to lie or crawl or sit in different rooms, letting him see outsiders occasionally will help, or perhaps taking him out in his carriage in a sitting position so that he can see the world as it goes by.

15 P. C. REDUCTION ORDERED IN FRANKLIN

Louisburg, N. C., April 21.—At a meeting of the board of county commissioners it was decided that land assessments would be reduced 15 per cent with the understanding that a board of equalization to hear complaints and make further adjustments. Licenses for selling beer were set at $50 per year beginning May 1, and four applicants were accepted.

A general feeling of dissatisfaction seemed to prevail with the body attending this meeting because of the action of the legislature in giving relief to tax delinquents while, as was claimed by some, showing no consideration for citizens who have already paid their taxes.

The cut of 15 per cent in the valuation of land which the commissioners instructed to be allowed also on merchandise was accepted with disappointment. "I want my land val-

Recent weeks have seen an agitation for doing away with those regulations which require applicants for postmasterships to pass examinations. Postmaster General Farley says no such change is contemplated.

Pending in Congress are several bills to repeal a law known as the classification act, which lists all government employees in various grades and pays them accordingly. One of the purposes of this act was to eliminate favoritism and politics. The repealists are getting no support from the administration.

Mr. Farley says also that no attempt will be made, until the end of their terms, to replace those Republican postmasters who are giving faithful service. This is perhaps the biggest blow of all to patronage-minded Democrats.

Presidential Discretion. The power of the President over civil service is far greater than is popularly supposed.

When the civil service commission was created, Congress apparently regarded the plan as something of an experiment. The law included only a limited number of government employees under the civil service regulations, but it empowered the President to transfer other groups there as he saw fit.

A succession of Presidents, both Republicans and Democrats, have issued executive orders putting under civil service many new classes of government employees. And, presumably what one President can do by executive order, another President can undo if he desires.

Mr. Roosevelt has been told he would have only to sign his name to one more document to take away the status of comparative immunity from politics enjoyed—and greatly cherished—by thousands now in office.

Hope Higher Up. The unlikelihood of any such a step does not mean, of course, that the administration will be destitute of awardable jobs.

With all its expansion, the civil service comprises, in the main, only the rank and file. The thousands of places higher up are reserved for political appointees on the theory that the President should have in key positions, where questions of policy are decided, officials of his own political faith.

With that limited field of patronage, it seems the politicians will have to be content, however much they may dislike it.

SMUGGLERS COLLECT BILLS FOR PARIS DRESSMAKER. Buchs, Switzerland.—(AP)—Here on the border of the tiny principality of Liechtenstein, fifteen men were arrested, who in the guise of mountaineers, specialized in smuggling currency in hollow ski sticks.

The police said the band was directed by a Paris woman who claimed she was a fashionable dressmaker and that under present restrictions this was the only way she could collect her bills.

Liechtenstein is one of the small countries that are regarded as safe havens for "fugitive capital."

BETTER DAYS ARE HERE. SAY 26,735 AMERICANS

New York, April 21.—That the business tide has turned, and that "better days are here again" is the firm conviction of 99.7 per cent of 29,500 average Americans whose opinions were collected by Collier's Weekly in more than 100 cities and towns throughout the United States.

The question asked in each case was: "Do you feel more certain of recovery than you did before the banking holiday?" An affirmative answer was returned by 26,735 of those interviewed.

Other questions asked were designed to show the attitude of the people toward giving President Roosevelt greater power to deal with unemployment, the farm problem, reduction of governmental costs, and other critical problems. The survey showed that upward of 90 per cent of the people, regardless of party affiliation, favor giving the President the needed authority.

LEANING TOWER OF PISA BOLSTERED SO IT WON'T LEAN TOO FAR AND FALL

Pisa, Italy.—(AP)—Fearing that the leaning tower of Pisa will lean too far, government engineers are injecting cement into the ground for hundreds of feet around it.

An increase of six inches in the tower's incline within the past century gave warning that unless preventive steps were taken the structure eventually would lose its balance.

A study of the foundation showed that by its gradual sinking it had released underground water which filtered up through the earth hand hastened the settling.

The cement injections are expected to restore solidity to the ground. Later the masonry supporting the tower will be bolstered.

Built in 1174, the tower was intended to be noteworthy for its architectural features, which include six colonnades above the ground floor. It did not attract wide attention, however, until centuries later when it tilted. Its top now overhangs the base by fifteen feet.

Song Contest

Despite the rain Thursday night, two hundred or more came out for the 4-H song contest at the Greenville high school.

The clubs that sang came from Pactolus, Bethel, Fountain, Winterville and Farmville. Over fifty came from Fountain. Drivers from Fountain went to the home of the club members and brought them to Greenville. Forty-seven girls and boys composed their chorus. The Pactolus chorus was made up of nineteen girls; Winterville 13 girls; Farmville 11 girls, and Bethel had 16 girls and 3 boys. The judges were: Judson Blount, Miss Eva Hodges, Miss Ona Shindler, who reported that they were most favorably impressed with the work of each group.

Several Belvoir girls and boys were present and prepared to sing "Sailing" and "Holy Ghost," but due to the storm that evening, the rest of the group could not come and they did not compete. The highest score in the sacred songs group was made by Farmville who sang "Holy, Holy, Holy." The second score in this group was made by Fountain, singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers." In the group of Everyday songs, Winterville scored first place with "Bells of Saint Mary's," and Bethel second place with "Bells of Saint Mary's." Winterville sang "Dixie" in the Patriotic group but had no competition and "Old Black Joe" was sung by Bethel with no competition. This was the grand winner as it scored highest of any number given. Winterville was second with "Bells of Saint Mary's" and Pactolus third with "All Through the Night." Much credit is due to the leaders in each school who helped the girls prepare this program and to those who made it possible for them to get to Greenville. This was a very successful beginning of club competition in singing and we hope to have annual contests from now on. Programs will be made up early in the fall.

Health Examinations.

Twenty-six girls reported for health check-ups at Winterville. The examinations were made by Dr. McGeachy, county health officer. Four girls tied for top scores and will be included in the county elimination to be held next Saturday afternoon at Dr. McGeachy's office. These scores were made by Frances Little, president of the club; Myrtle Reid Worthington, Vera Dare Rouse, and Thelma Bowen.

Health Queen To Be Crowned

Next Saturday all winners from the various 4-H Club throughout the county will report for the county elimination. The girl who scores highest will be crowned Queen of Health of Pitt county at the Community Fair, Saturday night, May 6. No public announcement of the winner will be made before Saturday night. All high scoring girls will take part in the coronation program.

The following schedule will be used to complete the health examinations next week: Monday, Bell Arthur and Farmville; Tuesday, Grifton and Ayden; Wednesday, Stokes and Falkland; Thursday, Chicod and Belvoir.

Lovely hair that frames the face or that forms a smooth glossy cap is always in the mode.

Keeping the scalp in good health is paramount. A massage which will loosen the scalp and thus stimulate circulation is achieved by placing the finger-tips naturally upon the head and rubbing each finger-tip gently around in a circle. Rub in such a way that the main pressure is directed toward the crown of the head.

An opportunity to see a real whale, in the flesh will be given the people of Greenville.

The Pacific Whaling Company, Inc., of Long Beach, California, have their representative in town completing arrangements for the arrival of the mammoth display. For one thing, it will be the largest visitor we have ever had as the whale is nature's largest creature and always has been. The $50,000.00 steel glass-enclosed car will be on location for two days, starting Saturday, April 29.

It was about a year ago, that the Pacific Whaling Company, Inc., of Long Beach, California, conceived the idea of sending an exhibit of this sort into the interior. It was received with such enthusiasm on the part of persons living inland that now several of the preserved whales are on tours of the country.

Everywhere people are curious to see these specimens of the only animal in the world that science is unable to completely analyze.

The whale is in perfect condition and just as it appeared when encountered off the coast of Southern California. It is transported on its own 100 feet glass enclosed railway car and is 55 feet long and weighs almost 68 tons. Its heart weighed 1,286 pounds and the tongue, which had to be removed during the embalming process and then replaced weighed 600 pounds.

In addition to the whale, the exhibit will include a Sea Elephant, other marine life, and the harpoon gun, and the modern harpoon with the explosive head.

Captain Lew Nichols explains the details of the exhibit and the captain lectures at length on the strange mammal.

How's Your Health

Photography And Medicine.

Simple photography, stereoscopic photography and the motion picture have been used in the advances of medicine.

In fact, some of the earliest motion picture experiments were made in studies of normal functions, such as walking, running and speech.

In recent years there has been developed an ingenious camera which photographs the interior of the stomach in the diagnosis of ulcers and cancer of the stomach.

A new type of photographic emulsion recently developed makes it possible to secure impressions of objects by so-called infra-red or dark light.

The ordinary photographic emulsion is not very sensitive to red light. For that reason the amateur can handle his exposed films or plates in ruby or red light.

The new emulsions, however, are sensitive not only to red light, but even to the longer wave lengths of the spectrum.

Applications of infra-red photography already have been made to medicine. Thus, photographs of human tissues taken by means of infra-red light, using the new emulsions, have revealed pathologic changes not ordinarily visible.

Photographs of this type taken of a case of lupus (tuberculosis of the skin) have shown marked distinctions between the dead skin, the tissue with lupus nodules in it, and healthy tissue.

This form of photography may therefore prove of value in the diagnosis of skin complaints.

One of the most interesting of the results of infra-red photography was recently reported by an experimenter in Denmark.

A man was photographed by ordinary methods and the picture showed him to be a typical negro of deep coloring. When photographed on an infra-red sensitive plate there was revealed a surprising modification in both tint and contour of his features. The modeling of his head revealed a marked Mongolian element in his heredity.

'Honey Blond' Paris' Latest Style in Hair

By ADELAIDE KERR

Paris.—(AP)—Blonds are back. Although the platinum blond, who reigned a year ago, has failed to stage a comeback, the "redhead," who succeeded her in fashion's fickle fancy, is dividing honors, these days with a new "honey blond."

"The Scandinavian blond—the true blond—with her rich golden coloring is the thing now," says Adolphe, who coifs some of the smartest heads in Paris.

"The platinum blond's place has been taken by the honey blond. There is another new deeper tint called "Roman gold" and auburn hair is still preferred by a number of smart women."

Individually is the rule for the 1933 spring coiffure. Headdresses are chosen to suit hats, which vary from the flat crowned sailor to models which turn up in the back, leaving much of the back hair exposed, and African fezes which crush down over one ear.

The favorite just now, however is drawn back from the face with one or two waves falling over the temple and ends in a cascade of short curls halfway up the back of the head. The ends may be barely long enough to curve upward or long enough to roll about the finger.

There are a number of variations of this new coiffure. One smart Parisian has her hair waved straight back from her forehead and finished with a series of very short curls extending almost to the top of her head. Another wears her hair drawn back with big loose curls quite low on the neck.

Lacquered hair will be less in vogue this summer than during the past winter, hair dressers declare, since the formality of lacquered tresses is less harmonious with the summer mode.

Park Tavern Named 'Moonbow'

Corbin, Ky.—(AP)—A rustic inn erected in the Cumberland Falls State Park has been named "Moonbow Inn" by the State Commission because during periods of the full moon a moonbow is visible over the falls. It is asserted that the phenomenon occurs at only two places in the world, here and at Victoria Falls in South Africa.

CITY WAITING ON BEER LAW

Prospective Dealers Await Action of Legislature On Regulations

With legalization of beer in this state a week off tomorrow at midnight, prospective beer dealers in this community today had adopted an attitude of "watchful waiting," as result of the legislature's inability to straighten out regulatory features of the 3.2 per cent beer and wine measure passed several weeks ago.

City officials likewise were unable to take action on the tax rate phase of the beer question, and also are waiting on the legislature to provide the state law before fixing the tax rate.

At the office of the city clerk it was revealed that five applications to handle beer had been filed for consideration of the city fathers. Some of these were filed about the time the legislature acted favorably on the beer question. It was intimated that numbers of other persons were considering licenses but were waiting until the state legislation had been provided.

While rumors regarding the handling of beer here have been in circulation for sometime, it was impossible to say how many places would be ready to quench the thirst of the populace with the foamy fluid when the law becomes effective at midnight April 30. However, it seemed assured that Greenville would be on par with other cities of the state and do her best to meet demands of those who greeted action of the legislature with such pronounced hilarity.

Licenses will be issued through boards of aldermen and county commissioners in each section of the state but the license charges will not be fixed until it is decided exactly what the General Assembly is going to do with the regulatory features.

New York Cotton

New York, April 22.—(AP)—Cotton futures opened barely steady, 15 to 21 points lower in response to disappointing Liverpool cables and under liquidation and trade selling.

The initial breaks carried July off to 7.57, or 50 points below the high of Thursday. Offerings were absorbed by trade buying and commission house demand and the market rallied sharply with July selling up to 7.49, or back to yesterday's close.

The market showed losses of about five to nine points at the end of the first half hour. Futures closed firm, seven to eleven points higher; middling 7.60.

Stock Market

New York, April 22.—(AP)—The stock market briskly resumed its advance after absorbing more selling at the start today. The final tone was strong with many issues up on to four points.

Trading was active with the turnover for the two-hour session of about 2,300,000 shares.

The usual spring upswing in business seemed to be reaching its peak some weeks later than usual and Wall Street prognosticators were not able to tell how long it would continue before the summer lull set in.

The stock tickers were kept humming through the session by active trading, but buying was in smaller volume.

Metal shares were again on a rise. American Can and U. S. Smelting rose four points. American Tobacco was strong also, up about four points.

News tickers said April sales of popular cigarettes would exceed the last months of the last year as result of the recent price cut.

Issues up two points or more included Dupont, American Sugar, International Silver, Allied Chemical, Corn Products and others. Issues up a point or more included U. S. Steel, Anaconda, Keenecott, U. S. Fruit and Pennsylvania.

Attacks Inflation Plan

Washington, April 22.—(AP)—A vigorous appeal to the country for pressure on Congress to defeat inflation rang out today as Senator Reed of Pennsylvania, renewed the dogged attack by the Republican regulars on the administration plan.

"If Americans will wake up then we will have a chance of being this bill," he shouted at the Senate.

He called for voters to flood his colleagues with telegrams for defeat of "this insane scheme."

"Unless Americans wake up," he said, "there is every likelihood the bill will pass."

He declared the inflation would harm the poor people of the country most. Wage earners particularly are launched into a long explanation of the effort he foresaw.

TAX FORECLOSURES IN HUNGARY BRING LAND TO PEASANTS

Budapest.—(AP)—Economic ill winds will have blown good to Hungarian peasants when plans to give them land, taken by the State in lieu of taxes, are carried out.

The Minister of Agriculture, Nicholas Kallay, will present the plan to parliament, and in May, at the annual Budapest fair, prizes will be awarded for the best suggestions as to dividing the land and constructing buildings.

Acceptance of land in payment of taxes owed by impoverished landlords was decided upon last year. So far no land has actually been transferred to the State, but it is expected that within a few weeks 15,000 acres will be received. The State also has 5,000 acres left over from the land reform carried out after the war.

Eugene Horvath, who is in charge of this work at the Ministry of Agriculture, expects that 2,000 peasants will have received an average of ten acres each by autumn. They will have five years in which to pay for the land.

If the plan succeeds, it may be extended to enable peasants, with the State as guarantor, to buy land from free holders willing to sell because of low agricultural prices.

So far no land has actually been transferred to the State, but it is expected that within a few weeks 15,000 acres will be received. The State also has 5,000 acres left over from the land reform carried out after the war.

Eugene Horvath, who is in charge of this work at the Ministry of Agriculture, expects that 2,000 peasants will have received an average of ten acres each by autumn. They will have five years in which to pay for the land.

If the plan succeeds, it may be extended to enable peasants, with the State as guarantor, to buy land from free holders willing to sell because of low agricultural prices.

Attacks Inflation Plan

Washington, April 22.—(AP)—A vigorous appeal to the country for pressure on Congress to defeat inflation rang out today as Senator Reed of Pennsylvania, renewed the dogged attack by the Republican regulars on the administration plan.

"If Americans will wake up then we will have a chance of being this bill," he shouted at the Senate.

He called for voters to flood his colleagues with telegrams for defeat of "this insane scheme."

"Unless Americans wake up," he said, "there is every likelihood the bill will pass."

He declared the inflation would harm the poor people of the country most. Wage earners particularly are launched into a long explanation of the effort he foresaw.

TAX FORECLOSURES IN HUNGARY BRING LAND TO PEASANTS

Budapest.—(AP)—Economic ill winds will have blown good to Hungarian peasants when plans to give them land, taken by the State in lieu of taxes, are carried out.

The Minister of Agriculture, Nicholas Kallay, will present the plan to parliament, and in May, at the annual Budapest fair, prizes will be awarded for the best suggestions as to dividing the land and constructing buildings.

Acceptance of land in payment of taxes owed by impoverished landlords was decided upon last year. So far no land has actually been transferred to the State, but it is expected that within a few weeks 15,000 acres will be received. The State also has 5,000 acres left over from the land reform carried out after the war.

BARNHILL TO GO ON TRIAL HERE MONDAY

(Continued From Page One) mitted the crime to obtain $10,000 insurance carried by his ward and which had been made payable to the defendant.

He claimed when arrested, however, that he knew nothing of the slaying of the young man and professed to be deeply grieved by the tragedy.

Seventy or more other actions were to be given hearing during the final week's sitting and indications were this would be as busy as the first week. About eight cases were disposed of when court recessed for the week-end yesterday, and these included some of the most important on the docket. Two murder cases, the charges of arson and embezzlement against Thomas E. Beaman and numbers of others of less importance were completed.

Judge Henry A. Grady copleted the week's work by giving Thomas E. Beaman the arson case jury ever heard in the courtroom here. He sharply reprimed the jury for failure to find Beaman guilty when evidence was convincing, and then denounced the former minister for "parading about the country as a wolf in sheep's clothing," and posing as a "representative of God while doing the work of the devil."

The contest was presided over by Superintendent Rose, who is chairman of this district as well as the new district just formed with headquarters at Kinston. The Kinston
