ROOSEVELT USES POWER TO STALL RECALTRANTS

The sudden bold challenge to President Roosevelt's leadership just as congress was about to adjourn made political history of a very interesting order.

It portrayed the legislative branch of the government in a new and unexpected attitude of defiance; proved that the republican independents who bolted their party to support Roosevelt last year are still independents; and gave the country its first glimpse of Mr. Roosevelt himself at Armageddon, forced to assert a mastery which a month ago had been docilely taken for granted.

In a large and emphatic way it demonstrated several things besides: That the sweet honeymoon days of the Roosevelt administration embraced no guarantee for future political harmony. That the republican organization in congress, battered and divided, it is, is capable of mustering, on occasion, a militant resistance to democratic policies.

But, finally, that in spite of this reawakening of the opposition, the powers already voted the President give him a governmental dominance for the present at least, greater than many members of congress themselves realize.

While some of the reconstruction fund labor is still available why not use it for the construction of a few public tennis courts for this city? Tennis is one of the great outdoor sports and is gaining in favor hereabouts but so far there are no courts here but privately owned ones which means that there are a lot of folks who would enjoy the game but have no place to play.

Attention is called to the fact that the time for appearance before the County Board of Commissioners for the purpose of seeking equalization of tax assessments has been changed to June 28. A PLAN WHICH SHOULD BE USED GENERALLY (High Point Enterprise) Conservation of surplus food products on the farms of Mecklenburg county tenanted by families which have not been able to fend for themselves during the depression is to be managed by welfare agents. Seven canning centers are to be established in the county. There will be under the supervision of the county home demonstration agent. To the services of these canneries all the families of the welfare list particularly will have access, and the purpose is to have several thousand cans of fruit and vegetables for use next winter. The use of the canneries will not be restricted to the families that have been afforded relief, but will be open to others. Under this system, it seems likely the welfare forces at work in Mecklenburg will be able to garner surplus food supplies from many farms for help in their program next winter. Up to the present time, weather conditions have not been favorable to an abundance of either fruits or vegetables, but a period of lavish over-supply will come during the growing season and all the welfare canneries will be ready for it. That is a fine bit of planning. It should commend itself to all sections of the state. Funds that may be used next winter for buying food ought not to be employed in paying for canned goods originated out of the state when the chance for stocking plenty of such goods this summer is right before these in command.

REFUSED BY ARMY AT 18. MAN STILL ACTIVE AT 88 Orangeburg, S. C.—(AP)—The army wouldn't take William Haas 70 years ago at the outbreak of the Civil War when he was 18 years old, because he had a "weak heart." Life insurance companies turned him down as a "poor risk" and Haas had to get along without army service or insurance. He has outlived most of the men accepted for military service and many a robust man who was readily granted insurance. Haas was born at Buffalo, N. Y., and married there. His wife says she has "trotted" along with him over ten states in the 64 years they have lived together. Haas operates factories for the making of handles, and has established many of them in various states.

By the World FORGOT

SYNOPSIS: Mrs. Lovelock, the housekeeper for George Bancroft's uncle, is dangerously ill and has been sent to the hospital. The uncle, furious at this interruption of his routine, has flung George against the star and bruised her face. She is struggling with the housework when Nicholas Boyd, formerly a movie star, arrives. She has been romantically attracted to Nicholas since she met him on a ship returning from America, his face scarred and his career ruined. While Nicholas is talking with George the doctor brings word of Mrs. Lovelock's death.

Chapter 20 "LET ME SEE YOU" George did not cry; she stood looking at Boyd in a puzzled helpless sort of way that seemed to ask for explanations. Surely it was not really possible for people to be well and strong one moment, and the next to be quite dead?

Boyd asked gently: "Where is your uncle now?" "At the Boar's Head, I suppose." "Would you like me to go and fetch him?" "Oh, no!" Then suddenly George gave a little smothered cry. "Oh, I feel so queer! I'm afraid I'm going to faint." She put out her hands, groping blindly for support and Boyd caught them in his own, gently guiding her to Lovelock's chair. "It's all right—hold on to me. Shut your eyes—you'll be all right in a minute." George obeyed helplessly, holding on to him as if her life depended on it, then presently she let him go. "I'm all right now," she said faintly. He fetched water for her and made her drink some. "You want someone to look after you," he said angrily. "Do I?" she pushed the heavy hair back from her forehead with a trembling hand. "Whom do you suggest?" she asked with a faint attempt at mirth. "I seem to be a nuisance all around as far as I can make out." Then suddenly she broke down, turning aside and sobbing with her face buried on her arms. "Oh, go away, go away."

Nicholas stood looking helplessly at her, then suddenly he laid a hand on her shoulder. "Stop crying, George, do you hear? Stop crying at once." But it was some time before she could control herself, and even then she kept sobbing and wiping away tears that absolutely refused to stop falling. And presently Boyd said: "Is there anything I can do for you?" "Would you?" she asked. "Of course, it's all wrong that a child like you should be so neglected." "I'm not really a child." "Tell me what I can do for you?" he urged. She stood up suddenly, holding to the arm of the chair for support. "Let me see you sometimes," she said in a quick, eager way. "There can't be any harm in it, I know you're married, and all that, and I don't want you, not in that way." He smiled faintly. "In what way?" he asked. "In the way you're afraid I do," she said bravely. "I mean, I'm not in love with you. Do you think I am?"

"I hope I am not such an egotist. There's not much in me to love at the moment." The hot color beat into her face and she bit her lip, then she said, with a return of her old eagerness: "Then can't we be friends? I could go for a walk with you sometimes, couldn't I? If I'm only a child, as you say, there couldn't possibly be any harm in my going for a walk with you. You said once that people would talk; well, do you think it matters what people say about anyone like me?" He asked with quick anger: "What do you mean 'anyone like you'?" George shrugged her slim shoulders. "Well, we've got such a bad name in the village that nobody wants to know us," she protested. Boyd's face softened. "Poor little kid," he said. The ready tears rushed to her eyes.

"Do you want me to cry again?" she demanded fiercely. "I do not," he answered fervently; he walked away from her and stood looking out of the window at the neglected over-grown garden. It was depressing like all the rest of George's surroundings, and once more he found himself wondering how it was that she had managed to remain so unspoiled, so very different from the girls with whom he had mixed in that part of his life which now seemed so far away. He thought of his wife, and she too, seemed remote, someone whom he had known years ago and almost forgotten. She would be scornfully amused if she could see him now. A fallen star indeed, standing in a poky kitchen trying in vain to say or do something that would comfort a girl like George. He turned suddenly. "All right," he said briefly. George echoed his words vaguely. "All right—what?" she asked. "You can have it your way," he told her unsmilingly. "We'll go for walks now and then, and let the village talk, shall we?" It was pathetic to see the way her face brightened. "Do you mean it?" she asked.

"Certainly I mean it," he answered. She looked at him for a moment then before he could move back or prevent her, she had crossed the space between them, and standing on tiptoe, kissed his cheek. "Oh, thank you," she said almost humbly. There was an embarrassed silence and then Boyd laughed. "Are you always so grateful for small mercies?" "If anyone is kind to me, I am always grateful," George answered. "But people are not kind to you very often, is that it?" he said, and George nodded, adding as an afterthought: "But I met someone who was, yesterday, when I was in London." "Your friend off the boat?" "No, a man," George said. "I met him in a movie," she added rather doubtfully. Nicholas frowned, and she hastened to explain. "He was quite a gentleman; he took me to tea afterwards and he paid."

His grave face relaxed into a smile. "He said he was a decent chap," George went on, encouraged. "He told me I had nothing to be afraid of." She paused. "He asked me for my address, and he said he would write to me." "It sounds like a film story," Boyd said dryly. "Yes, doesn't it?" George agreed. "It was really rather fun. His name is Clifford Asher."

"I see—there was a note of sarcasm, and handsome?" "He's young," George said very thoughtfully. "And strong, I should think, but not handsome exactly. He was kind though. He seemed to understand me at once; he said he knew that I was lonely." Nicholas laughed. "The gentleman evidently knows all the ropes," he commented. "What do you mean?" George asked, but he would not tell her. "And when do you see him again?" he asked. "I don't know; he said he would write." "I see." He moved stiffly as if his leg pained him. "Well, I must be going." She asked eagerly: "When shall I see you again?" His moody eyes rested on her face. "I should like to see you this afternoon," George said frankly. "But I suppose you won't care about that, so could I see you tomorrow?" "I shall go for a walk about eleven, if it's not wet." "Shall I call for you?" George asked, but he shook his head. "No, I don't think so. I'll go the way we went the other day—if I can find it." "You'll find it easily enough," George said confidently. She followed him to the door. "And thank you for calling," she added politely. "The pleasure is mine," Boyd answered; he raised his hat and walked away. George went back to the kitchen. For a moment she had forgotten the sudden tragedy which had intruded itself into her life, but now it came back to her over-whelmingly. Lovelock was dead; she felt as if the bottom of the world were falling slowly from beneath her feet. Lovelock had been an institution. George looked at the empty chair with its red cushion, and the slow tears coursed down her cheeks.

U. S. ECONOMIC DELEGATES IN LONDON

A Washington Daybook

By HERBERT PLUMMER Washington—What most political observers in Washington thought would happen, unless President Roosevelt succeeded in persuading congress to adjourn before the London economic conference had begun, did happen. Delegates to the world parley hardly had taken their seats before an explosion was heard in Washington in the senate as a result of the opening day's proceedings across the Atlantic. Ramsay MacDonald's injection of the question of war debts in his opening remarks to the conference had an immediate repercussion in Washington.

Transatlantic Cue It had been freely predicted that there would be trouble if congress had not wound up its work before the London conference was convened or before the June war debt payment from Great Britain fell due. MacDonald's speech gave senators their first opportunity to speak their minds. Two republican senators—Fess of Ohio and Robinson of Indiana—with the democratic Lewis of Illinois got into the fray. It was perhaps inevitable that this should happen and but natural, therefore, that such an opponent of tampering with the war debt question in any fashion as Robinson of Indiana would be heard from at the slightest opportunity. MacDonald's speech gave a perfect opening. This development produced an outright suggestion on the floor of the senate that the war debt question continued to be pushed, the American delegation should sail for home immediately. That was the suggestion made by the Indiana senator in his attack.

A Tight Spot The situation is a difficult one no matter which way you look at it. The December payments will be due before congress is convened in regular session next January. The crux of the whole thing seems to be that while the President may have the power to negotiate revision of the war debts, there are some who deny his right to accept a part payment or "token" payments have been much in the news lately. If, as some contend, token payments amount to default and Prime Minister MacDonald's assertion that war debts must be a part of the agenda at London, then the effect on the economic conference is not hard to figure out.

Thousandth-Second Accuracy From New Clock Run By Sound

By F. B. COLTON (Associated Press Science Writer) Washington—(AP)—A new kind of clock, controlled by energy of sound, is expected to transmit the most nearly accurate time in history by way of the Naval Observatory's wireless station. The new clock, its builders predict, will eclipse all previous records for accurate time keeping; with the unprecedented precision of one part in a hundred million—an error of less than one one-thousandth of a second a day. Clocks now used for sending the time signals cannot be set with an average error of less than three one-thousandths of a second. This highly accurate time not only would help to make America's watches and alarm clocks the most punctual on earth, but would aid greatly to precision of delicate scientific work that depends on accurate timing. The clock is to be held to its high accuracy by the constant, unvarying vibrations of a large quartz crystal. The crystal's vibrations control electric impulses, which rush 1,000 times a second into an electric motor that runs the clock proper, keeping it moving at a constant rate. The crystal's vibrations are controlled in much the same way a slide trombone player makes music—by changing the length of a brass tube through which sound waves are passing. Sliding the trombone in and out controls the music's pitch. Sliding a section of brass tube in the clock and out insures that the sound will always deliver the same energy to keep the crystal vibrating at the same rate. Energy from a battery passes through vacuum tubes and is converted into sound by a loud speaker. The sound waves pass through a brass tube and strike the crystal. As long as they strike it with unvarying energy the crystal vibrates at the same speed. Changing the brass tube's length by a sliding section offsets the change in the energy of the sound waves that results from "aging" of the vacuum tubes that supply the sound. Text includes: "Reach for a Lucky", "- for always Luckies Please!", "A man's cigarette? Well—here's why I enjoy Luckies", "Somehow, I have always felt that it takes a really fine cigarette to please a man. And since many of the men whose judgment I value smoke Luckies... I reach for a Lucky, too. True, I enjoy Luckies' fine tobacco quality and their delicious mildness. But my real reason is perhaps a trifle feminine. Men may not appreciate this as much as a sensitive woman—but I'm particularly grateful to "Toasting" for that comforting assurance of purity. I've talked to many women about this—remember, a cigarette becomes an intimate thing with us, we place it between our lips. And so, perhaps, because I am a woman this is my woman's reason for always saying "Luckies Please!" because "It's toasted"

My Beauty Hint

By TONNIE BRUCE (British Stage Actress) I retain the lines of my figure by passing up the elevator and walking to my apartment high up over the Prince of Wales Theatre. At first I walked upstairs merely because I needed the exercise, but now I prefer it, and I attribute my splendid health in great measure to this at least thrice daily activity. Also important is digestion, which I watch carefully.

HANDKERCHIEF SHOWER FOR MISS BOST

Among the most attractive affairs honoring Miss Mary Wall Bost, was yesterday afternoon, when Miss Emma Frances Hardee was hostess at bridge. The home of Miss Hardee on Third street was attractively decorated in garden flowers in shades of pink and white.

For high score Miss Mary Wall Bost was given a box of stationery. The hostess and her mother, Mrs. W. J. Hardee presented Miss Bost with silver in her selected pattern. Miss Gertrude Conroy of New York was remembered with a compact. A tempting ice course with salted nuts was served.

During the refreshment hour little Miss Anna Hardee presented Miss Bost with an attractively decorated box, surmounted with a miniature bridge and groom. The box contained a shower of lovely handkerchiefs.

DR. WHITEHEAD VISITING RELATIVES IN THE CITY

Dr. Cliff Whitehead of Bertie county, originally of Tarboro, is spending several days in the city. Dr. Whitehead is one of the most prominent men in the state, having represented North Carolina in four national Democratic conventions. He is a big game hunter and is a very interesting talker, having traveled all over the world. He was with the American legion in Europe and was presented with a medal by the French government.

He says there are no better people in all the world than in Pitt county. He is a guest of his kinsman, E. B. Higgs.

Fellowship Supper. Tonight at seven o'clock at the church a Fellowship Supper will be held for all members of the Council and Guild of the Eighth Street Christian Church. Mrs. E. G. Flanagan is chairman of the supper committee and is being assisted by representatives of the various circles. Each circle is also providing entertainment for the evening.

This is the annual business meeting at which time council officers for the ensuing year will be elected. A full attendance of members of the Council and Guild is expected.

EXUM—BOST.

Beautiful Wedding In Episcopal Church.

Today at high noon, St. Paul's Episcopal Church was the scene of a beautiful wedding when Miss Mary Wall Bost and James Gooden Exum became man and wife. The altar and chancel were simply but tastefully decorated with Queen Anne's lace ribbon grass and daisies and lighted with cathedral candles.

Miss Frances Taft, of New York, gowned in blue and wearing a shoulderette of pink roses, presided at the organ. She played "To a Wild Rose" and "Sweet Refrain," as the guests were assembling, and Lohengrin's Wedding March as the bridal party entered.

The ushers were Robert Exum and Jamie Exum of Snow Hill, both first cousins of the groom.

Miss Elizabeth Bost of New York, sister of the bride, attended as maid of honor and entered the church alone. She wore pink organza made on Princess lines with large pink hat, pink slippers and white gloves. She carried an arm bouquet of delphinium.

The bride entered with her father, who gave her in marriage. She was unusually pretty and chic in a traveling suit of Siel blue crepe made with swagger coat. With this she wore a large hat, gloves and slippers in a darker shade of blue. She wore a shoulderette of sweetheart roses and valley lilies. At the altar she was met by the groom with his best man and brother, Joe Exum of Snow Hill. They spoke their vows before the bride's uncle, the Rev. Sidney Stuart Bost, of Durham. He was assisted in the beautiful ring ceremony by the bride's rector, Rev. W. A. Lillycrop, and the groom's rector, Rev. J. Q. Beckwith.

Mendelssohn's Wedding March was used as a recessional.

The bride is the younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ashe Bost of this city. She is a popular member of the younger social set. Her amiable friendly disposition has endeared her to a large number of friends in this and other cities where she has visited. Since the announcement of her engagement a few weeks ago, she has been the recipient of a number of social courtesies.

The groom is the son of Mrs. J. T. Exum and the late Mr. Exum of Snow Hill. He attended the State College in Raleigh and is a member of the Sigma Pi fraternity. He is popularly known here as in his native city, having visited here on many occasions. He is identified with the Exum Company, a large mercantile company in Snow Hill.

Immediately after the wedding, Mr. and Mrs. Exum left for an extended honeymoon, after which they will make their home in Snow Hill.

Dinner Party. On Monday evening preceding the rehearsal for the Exum-Bost wedding, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Bost entertained in the parish house at a beautifully appointed dinner. The banquet hall of the parish house was beautifully decorated with profusions of garden flowers. The table was centered with garden flowers and covers were laid for seventeen. The guests included the members of the bridal party and the families of the bride and groom. An elegant course dinner was served. After dinner much merriment was caused by cutting a pretty wedding cake.

Among the out-of-town guests here for the wedding were Mrs. J. T. Exum, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Exum, Robert and Jamie Exum of Snow Hill; Rev. and Mrs. S. S. Bost and Sidney, Jr., of Durham, and Miss Gertrude Conroy of New York.

Luncheon For Miss Mary Wall Bost. Mrs. W. L. Harrington and Mrs. Hogan Gaskins were charming luncheon hostesses yesterday, honoring Miss Mary Wall Bost, bride-elect. The home of Mrs. Harrington on East Fifth street was lovely with profusions of varied summer flowers.

The guests arrived at noon and were given a most cordial greeting by the hostesses and honor guest. Misses Edna and Lella Davenport, seated at either end of the table, served a delectable barbecue luncheon. The table was covered with a cloth of lace and centered with a crystal bowl of mixed garden flowers.

Miss Bost was remembered with crystal goblets.

Guests included intimate friends of the honoree.

Return From Training School.

The following members of the Eighth Street Christian Church have returned from a week's course in Leadership Training conducted by the Department of Religious Education of the Disciples of Christ at Bonclarken, Flat Rock, N. C.: Robert S. Moye, Nannie Rowlett, Victoria Jackson, Mildred Wilson, Elsie Windham, Louise Briley, James Carr and Robert Sugg Fleming. Mrs. William A. Ryan was a member of the faculty.

Adventures of Two School Boys.

Have Johnny Moseley and Tommy Wilson tell you of their experience in a motor boat on Bear Creek, Bug Swamp and Rattlesnake Island near Washington, N. C. They got lost, spent the night in a swamp, eventually got out and came home. They reported seeing mosquitoes as large as wild turkeys, snakes large enough to swallow a man alive, and all kinds of fierce looking dragons in the shadows of the forest. It was a hectic trip, one of the boys will never forget—but that's telling the story. Ask them about it.

Christian Science Services.

"Is the Universe, Including Man, Evolved by Atomic Force?" was the subject of the lesson-sermon in all churches and societies of Christ. Scientist, on Sunday, June 18.

The golden text was from Isaiah 48:12; "Harken unto me, O Jacob and Israel, my called; I am he; I am the first, I also am the last. Mine hand also hath laid the foundation of the earth, and my right hand hath spanned the heavens; when I call unto them, they stand up together."

The lesson-sermon also included the following passage from the Bible: "Before the mountains were brought forth, or even thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God." (Psalms 90:2).

What Becomes of Movie Babies?

—That Marsh Child, For Instance

Joan Marsh looks a head to a career in films, desiring popularity but fearing the worries of stardom. And she can look back too—well, well, if it isn't Baby Joan doing a little record-keeping in an old Mary pickford film.

Hollywood — Movie fans who may wonder what happens to wide-eyed babies who go at the camera have the answer, or at least one answer, in Joan Marsh.

The wide-eyed infant who was Joan Marsh in silent pictures of Mary Pickford's heyday as a screen midget has grown into the wide-eyed blond who is Joan Marsh today.

Joan was only three months old when she began her picture career. She is 19 now, and only in the last two or three years has she drawn any notable roles.

In her case the first 15 years were the easiest, because it was at 15 that she tackled a screen career seriously once more, after leaving pictures at 6 for school and only occasionally dabbling in them.

Just Vamping Along. She vamped Adolphe Menjou so happily in "Bachelor's Affairs" that they called her to try to steal Raul Roulien from Gloria Stuart in "It's Great to Be Alive," a battle of blonds. Of native daughters, incidentally, too.

Joan has her own slant on star-take.

WORLD OF STAMPS By QUINTO JAMES

CAN'T EAT CAN'T SLEEP CAN'T WORK A Sign You're Rundown!

CALLS CONVENTION OF THE UNEMPLOYED High Point, June 20—(AP)—Lawrence Hogan, organizer for a full-fashioned hosiery workers union has issued a call for a North Carolina "State convention of unemployed and farmers" to be held here June 24 and 25.

But since the psychic dented East from rebidding and South passed her partner's two hearts West should have doubled the bid, which would have meant 900 points and a top.

But that's the way with successful bold, risky psychics. They make the holders of the big cards look foolish at double dummy.

Several times announced and as often postponed the Vatican series has appeared at last. As reported previously, the 18 values range from 5 centesimi to 20 lira, including two express stamps.

Most interesting from the pictorial point of view are the 30, 50, 75 and 80c, showing the Vatican gardens and in the far distance, the dome of St. Peter's.

The portrait of the Pope on the 1, 1.25, 2 and 2.75 is reproduced much more clearly than is usually the case with stamp pictures.

In honor of a philatelic convention held there last month, the republic of San Marino surcharged two values of a 1932 issue "Convengo Filatelico" down the right hand side and "28 Maggio 1933" down the left. The 1.75 lira becomes 1.25, and the 2.75 becomes 2.00.

That country is known as being decidedly conservative in stamp matters. The issue now in use dates back from 1912, and there have been only three commemorative issues in British history—the Queen Victoria jubilee issue of 1887-92, the British Empire exposition issue of 1924 and the postal union congress issue of 1929.

There is the further distinction that the pictures of only three persons—Queen Victoria, King Edward and King George—have appeared on the stamps.

For the convenience of stamp collectors the post office department has ruled that documentary internal revenue stamps may be obtained by mail, accompanied by cash or money order, from postmasters at all first and second class post offices, and at all third and fourth class offices located in counties.

PLYMOUTH IS TAKEN IN TOW BY LEAGUERS

Greenville defeated Plymouth here yesterday 7-4. Melton held the locals to six hits but his mates made half a dozen errors and they hurt the visitors. Plymouth got 11 hits off Walston. Bob Lang hit two singles and a triple to lead Greenville. Purcell, Chappell and Edens, with two hits each, led Plymouth. Curry caught for Greenville; J. Brown for Plymouth.

Plymouth defeated Greenville by a close margin at Plymouth Sunday and the victory here yesterday was received with interest by the large number of fans who witnessed the exhibition, one of a number of extra games to be played by the locals between the schedule of the Coastal Plain league this summer.

Snow Hill will come to Greenville tomorrow and Ayden will appear here Friday. Greenville will play at Snow Hill Saturday.

Much interest is centered around these games in view of the fact that each club is making a great effort to capture the top of the standing of clubs. The race at this time is largely between Ayden and Greenville, with Ayden already on top and apparently determined to stay there.

HOLDS VIEW THAT NOW IS THE TIME TO BUILD

Wilmington, June 20—O. W. Messick, lumberman, in a vocational address to the Wilmington Exchange club declared that now is the proper time to build.

Lumber and building materials are advancing in price and should experience a further advance in the near future, Mr. Messick said. The lumber industry, after a four-year slump, is growing active again, he said.

SPORT SLANTS

By ALAN GOULD

Is Johnny Goodman up on the golfing heights to stick? Is he another Jones or is he just a lucky little fellow, with plenty of courage and persistence? Will he turn pro or can he capitalize his fame and reputation sufficiently to stay with the simon pure?

As to the first two or three of the most common queries that have been shot at us since the Battle of Chicago, where Goodman routed the country's foremost professionals, it will be time enough to compare Goodman with Jones after a few more seasons of competition. One Open championship victory doesn't make another Bob Jones.

Jones himself paid tribute to the Nebraskan, however, after the tournament and remarked to some of his friends.

"Now maybe you will quit wondering how and why he beat me at Pebble Beach in 1929."

In reply to a question from Gene Sarazen shortly after his victory, as to whether or not he contemplated turning "pro" Goodman somewhat tartly replied.

"Shucks, I'm not that hard up yet!"

It wasn't exactly the polite thing, to say by Johnny speaks his mind briskly.

Recluse Of The Links

The real story of Johnny Goodman, the accounts of hardships he has undergone to continue competitive golf, the concentration he has built into his game and the sheer audacity of the young man, has never been adequately or completely told. It may not be told, readily for Johnny is not a confiding soul, nor has he had the "build up" that often is associated with a rising youngster in any branch of sport.

He didn't start out with the name of Goodman, he didn't and hasn't yet mixed with the so-called socially prominent of American amateur golf (i. e. the Walker Cup cast) and he hasn't a college degree, but Johnny can match golf shots, fairly and squarely in any kind of competition with any player in the United States, at the current writing. He's a bit boastful, but he has justified the confidence in himself.

He has developed so sensationally within four years, that it is impossible to say just where he will go or where he may be stopped. Golf being golf he probably will come a cropper. Winning the Open doesn't automatically assure him the amateur title, though he will be the hot favorite at Cincinnati in September.

He will find it tougher keeping his pose, his control and his game up to top notch, now that he is "king" than he did when he had everything to gain and nothing to lose.

Triumphed Over Odds

For the time being nothing can be taken away from Goodman and he can be given nothing but credit for the gamiest kind of an achievement against big odds.

He doesn't compare with Jones, Sarazen, Hagen or Craig Wood as a power hitter, but he has a "round" game. So long as he keeps and uses a "touch" around the greens that is at times little short of miraculous, and so long as he can reduce to a minimum his occasional streaks of wildness, the little Nebraskan will be as tough to beat or as difficult to discourage as any golfer in the game.

Stock Market

New York, June 20—(AP)—The stock market drove forward at a fast pace today as the dollar dropped to lower levels in foreign exchange markets but a huge volume of profit taking tended to hold price advances to moderate proportions. Dullness accompanied reactionary periods.

Feverish trading put the ticker a quarter of an hour behind floor transactions during most of the forenoon and gains of one to two were recorded in many leading shares.

Advances were shaded or lost as speculators took home some of their profits.

Principal share gainers at one time included, Case, American can, General Electric and American Sugar. American telephone ex-dividened made up this payment but eventually reacted about a point.

Earlier advances were replaced with declines of fraction to a point by General Motors Union Pacific, DuPont and New York Central.

The market had a somewhat soggy appearance in the late dealings. Transfers were 5,690,000 shares.

New York Cotton

New York, June 20—(AP)—Cotton futures opened steady six to eight higher in response to higher Liverpool cables and also on the advance in foreign exchanges.

The higher opening of the stock market attracted initial buying later and July sold up to 9.35 and December to 9.76 or 11 to 12 higher.

This advance encountered realization as well as selling and prices eased five or six from the best.

At the end of the first half hour July was ruling around 9.30 with the general list steady at advances of five or six points on active positions.

The volume tapered off after early buying had run its course and prices eased slightly.

At midday the market was quiet with prices around 9.27 for July and 9.68 for December or three to four net higher.

The market eased late in the day under increased liquidation and Wall street and souther selling.

Futures closed steady; spots quiet middling 9.25.

The New Ford V-8 Has A Unique Place In The Automobile World

NO OTHER CAR FOR LESS THAN TWICE ITS PRICE CAN BOAST OF SO MANY OF THE AUTOMOBILE OF TODAY.

EIGHT CYLINDER SMOOTHNESS, FLEXIBILITY, SPEED AND POWER WITH ECONOMY!

All aluminum cylinder heads increase speed, power and economy of operation.
Live rubber engine mountings.
Torque tube drive permits the springs to act as springs alone.
Straddle mounted rear axle pinion found only in high priced cars.
Double-drop X-type frame makes rigidity of body and chassis.
Automatic Houdaille shock absorbers give automatic ride control.
Steel constructed bodies with safety glass means security for your family.
112-inch wheel base and wider bodies give you riding comfort not found in any car selling for near its price.

THE MECHANICAL FEATURES OF THE NEW FORD V-8 ARE PROVEN AND TRIED. Its eight-cylinder engine is designed to give you 50,000 miles and more of trouble-free service.

Its great speed has been accounted for and you never need worry about burning out bearings. Speed, the demon wrecker of other cars, has been provided for in the new Ford.
No rear axle or differential troubles have ever been evidenced in a Ford and with the new rear axle in the present Ford you may rest assured of its dependability.
On the New Ford there are no NON-ESSENTIAL "gadgets" to give the owner troubles after a few thousand miles. The new Ford is simplified in its operation and has no proven improvements.

To ride in the new Ford is to believe its message.
There is no other way to experience the thrill of driving such a car.
Shift second speed with synchronized shifting.

THIS IS THE DAY OF THE EIGHT

Pontiac changes from six to eight—Chrysler changes from six to eight—
Buick changes from six to an eight—Studebaker changes to an eight—
Packard has changed to an eight—and those that haven't will.
