LONDON CONFERENCE BECOMES PERMANENT THING

Steering Committee Will Stay Constantly At Work

DECISION IS REACHED AT MEET TODAY

Ramsay MacDonald Receives Full Support of America in Plan to Keep Conference at Work; Recess to be Taken, However, Thursday; Silver Nations Near an Agreement.

London, July 24—(AP)—Far from being dead, the world economic conference may live many years as a result of today's decision by the steering committee to remain in permanent session here.

Premier MacDonald insisted this action be taken. Behind him was the full support of Secretary of State Cordell Hull.

Hull looks upon the conference not as having failed but as a series of conferences of which the London conference is only the starter.

Today's decision called for the original members of the steering committee to attend meetings and James M. Cox will be able to represent the United States as he will stay here several weeks after the recess starts.

The nations whose delegates are on the steering committee and will not be in London will be represented by their ambassadors here.

Sen Key Pittman expects five great silver producing nations to agree on purchase quotas of the metal by completing an eight power agreement for tabilized silver in relation to gold.

Under the pact the United States, Mexico, Canada, Peru and Australia agree to withdraw 140,000,000 ounces of silver from the market in the next four days while India, China and Spain, the chief holding nations, is promised to reset scales.

Uniform Sales Tax Is Now Effective In N. C.

Three weeks of actual experience with the sales tax has developed less of friction and difficulty than was generally anticipated.

Regulations governing the application of the tax were promulgated experimentally for the month of July only. It was expected that experience would suggest the need of revision of these rules.

The use of a series of schedules has been confusing, and has made uniformity of observance and practice difficult.

Merchants in the same general class would fall into different schedules because one would have a larger percentage of sales below ten cents than the other.

Merchants not in the same general class carry some merchandise of the same class, which would add a tax in one store and not in the other, by use of different schedules.

Merchants having a large percentage of sales in the low price group have not been able to collect the amount of the tax.

Drug stores, for instance, using Schedule 3, have collected only about two-thirds of their tax, and having to absorb one-third.

The July schedules were set up on the theory of setting the first taxable line as high as possible to avoid excessive rates of tax on small sales. To compensate for the loss of tax on sales below the taxable line the use of a cumulative rule on purchases at one trading period was denied so as to give the merchant an excess on taxable merchandise to make up the loss on non-taxable sales below the taxable line.

The experience has been strongly persuasive in the direction of a single schedule for all merchants, starting with a lower taxable line for the benefit of merchants having a large volume of sales below the taxable line and making it adjustable to all merchants by using a higher to range in each bracket and giving the customer the benefit of a tax adjusted to the total sum of his purchases.

BAD WEATHER STALLS BALBO

Italian Fliers Unable to Leave New York Because of Foggy Conditions.

New York, July 24—(AP)—Because of unfavorable weather, General Italo Balbo today postponed until tomorrow the take off of his 24 seaplanes armada on the return journey to Italy.

The general left the field to return to his hotel in New York City at 10:40 (SET) after waiting some four hours in the hope that fog conditions on the coast would improve.

The motors of the planes were covered and naval boats were sent out to bring in the crew of the ships. It is expected the fleet will take-off tomorrow morning if favorable weather reports are received before that time.

A survey indicates that 1,155,000 persons entered Miami, Fla. during the year ended March 15 last.

PITT CANNERY NOW RUNNING AT FULL BLAST

Plant Canning Thousands of Cans of Foodstuffs For Relief This Winter

The community cannery continued to go at full blast today, stacking up thousands of cans of foodstuff for consumption of Pitt county's needy next winter.

The cannery is handling products from various community and individual relief gardens from the county and similar plants at Farmville and Ayden are taking care of products in those areas.

K. T. Futrell, director of the welfare department, through which R. F. C. money is being distributed for this work, said today he was highly pleased with progress of the canning plants and felt sure the tremendous supply from these sources would play an important part in taking care of the relief situation during the winter months.

Twelve workers are employed in actual operation of the plant here with a total of 40 serving in the entire canning movement. The plant is under the direction of O. C. White with Mrs. Randolph as supervisor.

The cannery has been operating two weeks at normal capacity. It is capable of turning out 400 cans daily and with operation extending through the next two months it was believed the goal of 40,000 cans would be reached.

ADVENTURE SERIAL BY FRANK PACKARD STARTING TODAY

A lone man's amazing flight against the vicious forces of the New York underworld provides the plot for Frank L. Packard's story "The Hidden Door", which will serially in The Daily Reflector beginning today.

Colin Hewitt, a writer of fiction and friend of police and criminals, unwittingly was drawn into the unrelenting man-hunt for gangdom's most sinister figure—THE MASK. He was the ruler of a dozen illicit lines, feared, hated and unafraid of the law or gangster codes.

Mollisons Will Continue Flight To New York City

POST SAYS HIS RECORD WILL BE SHATTERED

Sees Faster Flight Around the World in Not too Distant Future.

New York, July 24—(AP)—Wiley Post has no illusion about the longevity of that record of 7 day 8 hours and 49 minutes he set in his dash around the globe. He thinks some one will break it in the not too distant future.

Sitting comfortably in an easy chair for the first time in more than a week, Post told yesterday of his adventure fighting winds and for of many lands.

Asked what he thought the possible time around the world would be, he chuckled and said: "O, about thirty seconds, I guess. No one really knows but they are going to go faster and faster."

The robot pilot that helped him around the globe made a big hit with Post despite some difficulties. He said he had rather have it than a human co-pilot because it was more accurate.

Post, who ended his flight at 10:50 o'clock Saturday night had time yesterday only to have a few of the obvious wrinkles pressed from his gray trousers before a busy day started.

COTTON PLOWS GET BUSY HERE

Farmers Begin Plowing up Staple They Agreed to Take Out of Cultivation.

Plovers were busy in Pitt county fields today as farmers began taking out of production over 4,000 acres of cotton they agreed to destroy under the government crop reduction control campaign to improve price conditions.

Under advice received from Washington last Saturday authorizing County Agent Arnold to go ahead with the issuance of special permits several farmers today were given permission to start their plows moving.

The first to receive this permission was Dr. L. C. Skinner, of Greenville operator of several large farms in this section. He had agreed to cut acreage on three of his farms which met the terms as provided under the contract with the government.

Several other growers received permits about the same time Dr. Skinner got his and it was expected by tomorrow plows would be moving at a high rate of speed in many sections of the county.

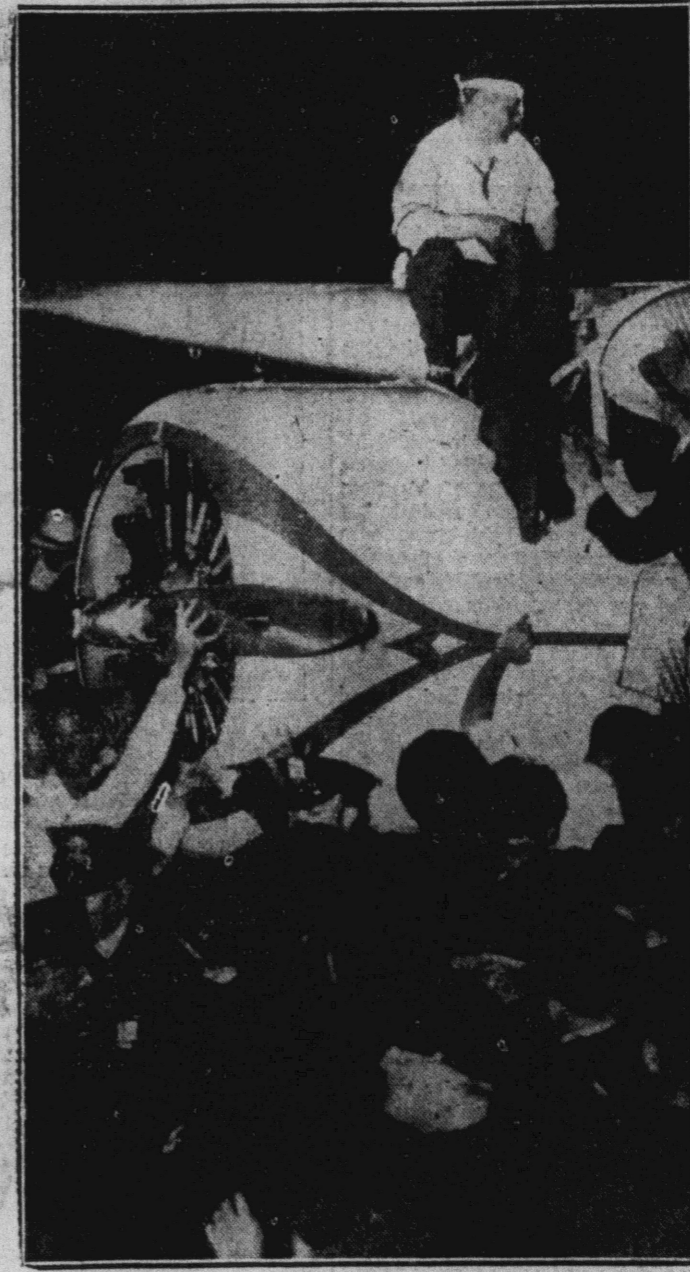

According to final figures of the Department of Agriculture here, Pitt county growers have agreed to take 2,440 bales of cotton out of cultivation. For this they will receive approximately $130,099.80 on the basis of the government agreement of 12 cents a pound.

Pitt county ranks as sixth among the state in cotton production.

Hospital attaches here reported his condition as much improved this morning and that he was resting quietly.

E. G. Flanagan, Jr., driver of the car, suffered from shock and bruises. The two young men were headed in the direction of Morehead City where they planned to spend the weekend when the accident happened.

FINISH OF AROUND-WORLD DASH

Hospital attaches here reported his condition as much improved this morning and that he was resting quietly.

E. G. Flanagan, Jr., driver of the car, suffered from shock and bruises. The two young men were headed in the direction of Morehead City where they planned to spend the weekend when the accident happened.

While approaching a curve, Flanagan was said to have looked at his watch to determine the time. The car went out of control, crashed into a phone pole and then came to a stop in a field.

PLAN TO USE LOANED SHIP REST OF WAY

English Fliers Recovering at Bridgeport Where Plane Crashed in Landing Last Night; Physicians Report Them in Fine Shape and Ready to Resume Flight.

Bridgeport, Conn., July 24—(AP)—A representative of James and Amy Mollison who crashed here after their trip from Europe, said today they would continue their flight to New York this afternoon in a borrowed plane.

Dr. Isaac Harshberger, who attended the Mollisons last night, visited them again today with Dr. R. C. Patterson. They were in the fliers' apartments about half an hour and reported them "in fine condition."

Dr. Harshberger described Mollison's injuries as the most serious, saying thirty stitches were necessary to close up two wounds in the face and head. Mrs. Mollison's right hand was lacerated and both suffered numerous superficial abrasions, the physician said.

They also suffered from shock and fatigue.

"They were much rested after nine hours sleep" he said. The British empire's famous flying couple crashed last night near the end of the first leg of what is to be a triangular flight from Wales to New York, thence to Bagdad and thence back to England.

F. A. TURNER SPEAKS HERE

Assisting Rector of Episcopal Church, Delivers United Service Sermon

Another large crowd was on hand last night at the united church service on the courthouse square and fully enjoyed the inspirational message and congregational singing. The services are being held on the lawn back of the courthouse each Sunday evening as a means of giving numbers of the various denominations a chance to intermingling and gain a more sympathetic understanding of their problems.

The speaker last night was F. A. Turner, formerly with the English Church Army, who is assisting the rector at St. Paul's Episcopal Church this summer. He brought a forceful message based on Newman's immortal hymn "Lead Kindly Light," and was heard by a crowd that filled almost every available seat, with numbers standing on the edge of the assemblage in an effort to catch every word of the eloquent young minister.

Rev. E. L. Hillman, pastor of Jarvis Memorial Methodist Church, was director of the service, and the song program was in charge of the Episcopal choir with Miss Elizabeth Andrews as the accompanist. Singing was directed by Rev. W. S. Harden, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, who recently returned from a vacation in Georgia.

Rev. W. A. Ryan, pastor of the Eighth Street Christian Church, delivered the opening prayer, and the choir rendered a special selection following congregational singing. Mr. Harding read 14 verses from the first chapter of John.

First calling attention to the incident surrounding the writing of "Lead Kindly Light," Mr. Turner explained the hymn was simply a prayer as are the majority of such songs. It was written by Newman, he said, during a storm at sea, and indicated the faith of the writer in the supremacy of God in the face of apparently insurmountable obstacles.

The HIDDEN DOOR by Frank L. Packard

Chapter One

IN EVENT OF DEATH

Two murders had been committed there in times gone by. There had been an interval of more than a few years between the two killings and the one was in no way connected with the other except as to locale—of which reason, those who remembered and were superstitiously-minded always claimed that some day sooner or later that same locale would inevitably be the scene of a third murder.

Its location—on a side street just off Washington Square—afforded a certain seclusion and, for New York—a comparatively quiet retreat. Colin Hewitt was not superstitious; nor indeed was the previous tenant from whom, as it were, he had inherited the place—a fellow writer who, some two years ago, had left New York to make his home in the south of France.

It had once been a small stable. It was reached by a narrow passage-way from the street, and fronted on a diminutive yard which separated it from the dwelling in which in past years it had been a necessary ad-junction.

Colin's friend had metamorphosed it into a combination of literary workshop and cozy dignities. Colin had made no changes save, of course to furnish it with his own effects.

Except for a bathroom and pan-try-kitchen, it possessed but two rooms: the bedroom above; and the "shop" as Colin called it, on the ground floor, that opened, just as in the days of the old stable door, di-rectly on the yard.

It was night, near to midnight, and Colin sat now with his elbows propped on the edge of his flat-topped desk, his chin cupped in his hands, his quiet light brown eyes fixed introspectively on the figure of a young man of about his own age who was ensconced in a lounging chair opposite the desk and who at the moment had just gulped down a stiff spot of neat whisky.

Colin's companion had many aliases; but when some thirty years ago, they had both been born in the same obscure little village in the western part of the state, the other had been christened John, and his surname had been Turner. He had flamed red hair. He had never been called John; he had always been known as Reddy.

"They had been close chums through the village school days. Later Colin had taken a university course followed by a postgraduate one abroad, specializing in modern languages; Reddy, on the other hand, had followed numerous courses of instruction under various warden in various institutions that were quite as famous in their own way as were the seats of learning Colin had attended.

At the age of fifteen Reddy had run away from home, and it was not until a week ago that Colin on one of his customary nightly prowls after "material," had bumped into the other in a joint of excessively ill repute run by one Nigger Joey. Since then—

"That's a laugh!" exclaimed Reddy Turner of many aliases. "You don't owe me any thanks. I've introduced you to some of my mob offhand-like; and that's as far as it'll ever go. But what I'm saying is that though the papers pat you on the back and say you know your onions when it comes to writing crook stuff better than any other guy that ever dished it out, you're only kidding the public that hands you a hatfull of dough every time you bust into print.

"You're good tonight, Reddy! Nothing like honest criticism. Don't spare my feelings. Go on."

"That's all right," grunted Reddy. "Sure! Now that I'm at it, I'll get off my chest. You go out at night visiting a lot of dumps and hang-outs; you know a lot of lags and cokes and a big shot or two; you're pals with some of the dicks down at the Homicide Bureau; you're in thick with the police reporters; and you go out and wrap your arms around the neck of any likely bum or dame you meet in the street or in the parks, bring them in here where nobody's to know and where this nobody's business, give them a snort and a bite, and frisk the history of their lives out of them.

"Everybody knows you're on the level and wouldn't squawk, but all you're getting out of it is what you call color, and the rest is your imagination. Maybe that's enough. I don't say it isn't; I'm only saying that what you're getting looks like nothing at all alongside of the real works."

"Then, perhaps," suggested Colin quizzically, "you can set me on the right track?"

"Sure!" Reddy shrugged his shoulders. "That easy! Get into the racket yourself."

Colin heaved himself suddenly up from his seat and, circling the corner of the desk, broad-shouldered, a good six feet in height, stood towering over the man in the chair. Then he laid his hand on the other's shoulders.

The hint of banter was gone.

"Why don't you cut it out, old man?" he asked.

Reddy's only answer was to fix his eyes abruptly on the toe of his boot.

Colin surveyed the other now in a grave and troubled way. There was age in what should have been a young face. The cheeks were thin and of an unhealthy pallor; the jet-black eyes were deep-set and burned too brightly. Colin's eyes roved over the trim, almost dapper little figure and rested speculatively for an instant on a significant, though almost imperceptible, bulge below the left shoulder of the other's coat.

"Why don't you cut it out, Reddy?" he prodded earnestly.

"I've thought of it," he said. "I suppose we all have—only most of us never get any further than letting the idea buzz around in our brains a bit. It isn't so easy. I couldn't cut it out without ducking my nut and giving my mob the shake, and that means getting out of New York."

"Which is a splendid idea!" declared Colin heartily, as he appropriated the arm of the other's chair. "Look here, Reddy! Get away from all this. What you need, to begin with, is a good physical house-cleaning—the mental side of it will follow. You don't look well—and you're not.

"It will end up by your being put on the spot."

"You need a good big dose of the out-of-doors. The mountains, the rivers, or anywhere you like—a camping trip, say. I'll go with you—a month or two of it. A fresh start somewhere. Let's go. You say you're self that the only way you can shake your mob is by leaving New York."

"Yes," said Reddy; "but you see, even if I wanted to, what puts a present 'job' all I can say is that you're a proper fella, Reddy. The chances are an even fifty-fifty that it will only end up by your being put on the spot yourself."

"I know that," admitted Reddy laconically. "Better than you do."

"Well, then?"

"That's why I blew in here to-night," he said. "I didn't just come for a drink and a talk. I've been thinking it over. I may get mine all right any old time. I came to ask you to do something for me if I got croaked, but I was afraid I would be asking too much until what you said so ill, and the thought of which was like a gentle arm enfolding her.

Someone had come into the room and spoken her name; not the name George, which everyone called her, but "Robin," and at the sound of it it had been as if all the sorrow and unhappiness she had known rolled away and left nothing but a great peace and feeling of rest, which was so beautiful it hardly bore thinking about, even now.

But George did think about it. She thought about it as something alive and tangible, which she held fast to her heart when presently she fell asleep.

A day or two later Evelyn came to see her; a tearful, beautifully dressed Evelyn, who declared that she would never be happy again.

"My life has been one long tragedy," she wept, carefully avoiding damaging her make-up. "I shall never be able to understand it. Why was he in that dreadful studio? Nobody seems to know. They all say he was most gallant—that he tried to save that poor little what was her name? I have actually forgotten. As if his life was not a thousand times more valuable than hers. He might have thought of me a little—Evelyn sobbed, forgetting that it was the very last thing she had ever desired Bishop to do, and that already she was planning her future and a third husband as soon as the necessary period of mourning was ended.

"Fortunately, I look my best in black," she had confided to her dresser.

George turned her face away; every word her mother said, was adding to the vague knowledge in her own heart, and she felt that she could not bear it.

Evelyn's white hand touched her own.

"We have only each other now," she said emotionally, "we must never part again, George. You must always live with me."

George let that pass, it seemed such a triviale compared with the other vivid pictures that were always before her eyes.

"I don't know whether they have told you," Evelyn went on more composedly, "but in his will, Bishop left you a quite a nice little sum of money. So adorable of him, I think. A hundred thousand dollars, George; he warded it so sweetly. To my wife's little daughter, George Bancroft. And it was a new will, only made a few days before he died. It almost looks as if he had a premonition of what was to come, poor man."

And presently Evelyn had gone, and George drew a sigh of relief.

Nicholas came the next day. He sat down beside George and took her hand, holding it against the disfigured side of his face.

George was more glad about that than anything, glad that he should no longer try to turn away from her.

For a long time neither of them spoke, then George said in a voice less whisper, all her natural eloquence where he was concerned quite gone.

"Nick darling, is it all right?"

"If it's right for you, Robin."

George gave a little sigh of complete happiness.

"I've got everything I ever wanted," she said. "I wish you had."

"Will you believe me, if I say I have?"

"But you can't—I mean—I could not possibly make up for every-thing."

"If I had to choose between go-ing back to the old life without you and staying as I am, with you, I should stay."

She took his face between her hands, leaning forward and gazing at him with passionate earnest-ness.

"Then it is all right? Every-thing?" she asked again, breath-lessly.

Nicholas drew her to him and kissed her lips.

"Everything, Robin!"

STATE Wednesday

With the actual plowing of cotton under way in this county there can be little or no doubt as to the fact that the farmers are really going through with their contracts with the government to re-duce the production this year. The movement was one primarily for the relief of the farmer but even at that the farmers are to be con-gratulated for the spirit of co-operation they have shown. This reduction will reflect itself in the prices they do produce and to the success of this campaign should likewise have its effect on other farm prices for already the government is making its plans for reduc-tions in all kinds of money crops for next year to meet the demands.

Attention is called to the uniform schedule of sales taxes published today to which every merchant in the state will have to comply. Since the first of the month when the sales tax went in to effect neither the mer-chants nor the buying public have seemed to know just where they stood on the matter with the result that no two charged the tax alike and the buyer never knew what the tax would be until told. We urge our readers to study this tax schedule for their own benefit.

THE BILLBOARD TAX

(New Bern Sun-Journal)

Those who have been given to advertising by billboards and roadside signs, after a month of grace, have had ample time to inform themselves as to the new state tax, says the state revenue department, and steps will be taken in the near future to see that the tax or the signs are removed from the high-ways.

A tax of $1 per year on each sign or billboard, in addition to the tax levied on all outdoor advertising companies, was levied by the last session of the legislature. That rate holds good up to 500 signs. Pay-ment of $500 entitles one to 500 signs, or as many more as one may desire. Each sign or billboard, how-ever, must bear metal license tags bearing a serial number and date, and enforcement of the law be-comes the duty of the highway pa-trol.

In the near future, says the an-nouncement from the state capital, the highway patrol will be ordered to begin its inspection of billboards and highway signs. If they are without license tags they will be ordered torn down. The only ex-ception made is where the sign is on a building where the advertised product is sold. That will permit gasoline and oil companies and soft drink stands to use signs on their places of business advertising the products they have for sale.

The result will likely be a con-siderable improvement in the ap-pearance of North Carolina high-ways. A sign on which the owner is willing to pay a dollar tax will not be that type which is permitted to rot down and become an eyesore to the traveling public. Legitimate out-of-door advertising ought to pay for its use of the public high-ways.

THE SUN SHINES

A thousand notes danced in the long rays of sunshine that stretch-ed from the sky right down through the window to the floor of George's room.

George lay in bed watching them with dreamy eyes.

She had been ill such a long time; sometimes it seemed as if she had never known anything but a darkened room, and hushed voices and a kind, capable arm that seem-ed to punctuate the days by gen-tly lifting her and making her drink unpleasant things.

She was better now. Only that morning Dr. Dudd, who had felt unable to rely on his own skill and had brought another doctor from London to share the responsibility, had beamed down at George and had told her he was proud of her.

"You'll do," he said comfortably. "You'll do very well."

"Thank you," George said po-litely.

And then just now Edward Ban-croft had come to see her; a stoo-d looking Edward who stood awkwardly at the foot of the bed and seemed as uncomfortable as a bull that has suddenly found itself in a china shop. "Well, what about it?" he jerked out after a moment.

"All right," George said smiling faintly.

Somehow she knew she was all right though for the moment she felt too weak to peer into all the corners of her mind and discover why she was so sure.

Presently, she asked: "Are you married yet?"

"Married!" Edward looked as awkward as a schoolboy.

"Married!" he repeated scornful-ly. "I should say not. Not while you've been lying there scaring us all out of our wits. No, I told her she must wait."

As a matter of fact, it was Mrs. Spears who had told Edward that he must wait. "Time enough for us," she had said flatly. "Life and death are more important things than marriage."

Edward would like to have said that sometimes death and marriage were one, and the same thing, but he restrained himself; he was not feeling quite so facetious as usual.

He came round to the side of George's bed and patted her hand.

"Nothing to worry about," he said, "you'll be all right."

"I'm afraid I've been a great nuisance," George said. "I'm sorry."

Edward Bancroft coughed loudly to hide his unwonted emotion.

"There's a good time coming," he said, "a darned good time coming, you see."

George's eyelids flickered; sub-consciously, she knew what he meant, but as yet she was a little afraid of the knowledge. It seemed so tremendous, so overwhelming.

She said with a nervous feeling that she must shy away from the subject, "Do you know, you look— younger, somehow."

Her uncle chuckled.

"Do I? Shouldn't be surprised! You won't believe me, George, but since you've been ill, I haven't touched a drop of whisky, not a single drop! Ah, I though you'd be surprised, but I'm going to have some now, just to celebrate. Yes, by gad, I am."

He patted her hand again, and made a clumsy exit, glad to escape from an interview he had dreaded more than anything in his life be-fore.

George closed her eyes, and tried not to think, but it was no longer so easy to shut out the things she had known so intimately and suffered with so greatly before she fell ill.

One by one they came creeping back, forcing themselves upon her notice, clamoring for attention.

The headline of a newspaper—"Fire in Film Studio."

Her little body was convulsed by shivering.

That anyone so young and pretty as Billy should have had to meet such a terrible death!

And then Bishop! Dear Bishop, with his halting kindness and some-ber eyes. In some strange certain way, George seemed to know that his death need not have been. Dur-ing the hours of her greatest weak-ness she had been conscious of queer flashing pictures dancing be-fore her—of Bishop saying "I should like to help you, if I could;" of Bishop writing to her, "I meant it when I said I would help you if the opportunity ever came my way."

Had the opportunity come his way? Had he—would she ever know?

She would never be able to ask him. She would never see him again, but perhaps, wherever he was, he had got free at last. Per-haps someone with kind hands had taken that look of patient endur-ance from his eyes.

She would have given so much now, to have been able to take the kindly hand which she had struck down when he would have touched her.

With sudden fear of her own weakness, she dragged her thoughts away to another picture, the most precious of the many that had flashed before her when she was

Canning

Canning is the chief program of the women and girls in the county this week. One 4-H Club member writes for some more recipes. She says, "Mother and I are running in a canning race with their neighbors."

The three community canners have been quite busy this week. Greenville has been able to can around four hundred cans a day. Ayden has canned 1346 pints and put three pecks of cucumber pickle in brine. Farmville has done 2209 cans and Greenville has completed 3101 cans. The colored people have reported 466 quarts canned. This makes a total of 7388 pints reported to date.

Pierce Club Active.

Not all clubs hold their own meetings when the agent is unable to attend. At the July meeting at Pierce the minutes of the June meetings showed a record of 35 in attendance and a splendid program while the home agent was in 4-H camp. We are looking forward to the time when all clubs will be active.

State Short Course.

Several women will attend the state short course at State College next week. Each club should have reports of the short course in August.

The State 4-H Short Course has been postponed until early September. The material and pattern for club uniforms are in this office and those who expect to go should call for them early enough to get the dresses made.

Home Agent in Raleigh.

The Home Demonstration Agent will be in Raleigh next week attending the State Farm and Home Convention and the annual conference for farm and home agents.

The child had been under constant medical attention since drinking the lye, but her injuries were so serious that slim hope was held for her recovery.

Surviving are the parents and the following children: Ruby, Myrtle, Bettie, Mrs. Lynn Ivory Britt and Heber Baker, all of this community.

FRENCH TO RESTRICT FILM IMPORTATIONS

Paris July 24—(AP)—A drastic restriction on film importation which some importers said threatens virtually to bar American movies from France, was imposed today in a decree applying a quota system on foreign talking pictures.

Original versions of foreign sound films, of which Hollywood supplied 150 in the past year, may be shown in only five theatres in Paris and 10 theatres in the provinces in the year ending next July 1, unless the ministers of the interior decrees otherwise.

Foreign films with the dialogue "dubbed" in French were limited to 140. American interests saw a growing demand for "gubbed" films blocked.

Arthur K. Kelly, general European manager for United Artists, said the American embassy will be asked to protest to the French government on the grounds that the decree likely would ruin the American business.

French independent exhibitors already have protested to Premier Edouard Daladier that the French industry was incapable of supplying the requirements.

Return From Church Reunion At Warrenton

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Rose have returned from Warrenton where Mrs. Rose spoke at a reunion of the membership of Zion Methodist Episcopal church, a few miles from the town.

The church, one of the oldest in Warren county, was erected by Mr. Rose's grandfather, and many members of the family as well as other old and distinguished families of the community were on hand to take part in the celebration.

In addition to talks by representatives of the various families, a delightful picnic dinner was served on the church grounds, and a crowd estimated at over five hundred was on hand to enjoy it.

Mr. Rose described the occasion as one of the most delightful in church history as it enabled him to renew many acquaintances and visit places of interest of his boyhood days.

Build Up that Skinny Child!

Enrich His Impoverished Blood

Sickly, weak, underweight children are usually lacking in rich, red blood. When blood becomes poor, a child becomes rundown. Already weak, he loses appetite, which makes him still weaker. Take no chances on a child gaining strength by himself. Start giving him Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic right away. This famous tonic contains both iron and tasteless quinine. Iron makes for rich, red blood while quinine tends to purify the blood. In other words, you get two effects in Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic.

Put your child on this time-proven tonic for a few days and see the difference it makes in him. Good appetite, lots of pep and energy and red roses in his cheeks. Children like Grove's Tasteless Chill Tonic and take it eagerly. It is absolutely harmless and has been a reliable family medicine for half a century. Get a bottle today at any store.

DID YOU KNOW?

That you could get a complete factory built motor installed in your Ford in exchange for your worn motor for less than it cost to overhaul?

This is a wonderful offer for those who have driven their cars many thousand miles, yet desire the performance they had from their car when it was new. It should also prove very attractive to those considering the purchase of new cars or trucks when they know that after driving their car or truck any number of miles or months they can get a factory motor in exchange for old one for less than it would cost to have it worked over.

This attractive offer is worth investigating.

KINSTON WINS 2-0 TILT OVER GREENVILLE

By R. O. MOYE, Official Scorekeeper

Stockton completely baffled the local boys Saturday evening for the second time this season and won for his teammates by the score of 2-0.

Stockton allowed only one hit, this being a single by Miller in the third inning. Sigmon and Forbes pitched for Greenville and yielded seven hits. Kinston got a total of three hits in the first inning, aided by an error and scored their first run. In the sixth frame Matt Howell Kinston right fielder, hit a homer over the center field fence for the second tally of the game.

Greenville had a chance to tie the score in the first inning after Miller had advanced to third with only one out, but it was just a case of not being able to hit when a hit meant a run. Two beautiful double plays were made by the locals in the fourth and seventh innings. In the fourth the play was from Sigmon to Bostic to Brown and the play in the seventh was from Smith to Brown. Greenville was credited with three errors, Kinston two, both being made in the ninth frame.

DEAVER STILL READY TO WED

Says He was not Joking, as Stated in Paper, But is Ready to do Business.

Otis Deaver, who wrote to Pittsburgh's police chief to help him find a wife, and who Saturday told a Reflector representative over the telephone he was only "joking" because he thought it was some of the "boys" trying to kid him, today asked the newspaper to say that he was not trying to be facetious with the Pittsburgh police head, but that he really meant business.

To date, Deaver said, he has received about one hundred letters from fannies of the Pittsburgh area, and is giving them due consideration with the intention of writing them and getting all the dope possible before deciding which is the most eligible.

And another thing Deaver wants the marriageable ladies to get under their craniums - he isn't forty years of age as stated in the letter and he isn't so darn bashful as the letter would indicate. The fact is he is only 19, healthy, strong and financially able to give some girl a good home.

The reason the age forty crept in to the letter Deaver said came about through the fact that he turned it over to a friend to handle and that individual put his own age; hoping perchance to cash in on the deal also.

So, girls, if you want to get married here is a golden opportunity - thrust at your doorsteps by a man who may be rather retiring but is ready to do his part when it comes to take the solemn vows of matrimony.

Jesus - the Kindly Light - and that He might be implanted in every heart, revealing the splendor of that ray which has been guiding mankind to the Cross ever since time immemorial.
He told of the Oxford movement inaugurated in England a hundred years ago and said the writer of the hymn was one of the number of men who went out into the world and labored in behalf of Christianity.
He declared the encircling gloom was greater today than it had been in many a year, not only in sin, but in unbelief, and that people were lost in the darkness. The light came through the night on Christ, mas over 1900 years ago, he stated, and is still shining through the clouds of unbelief to lead the people back to God.

The HIDDEN DOOR

A swift-action, multi-climax story of machine-gun tempo article is not an exact sum, but will vary with reference to whether two or more purchases are made at the same time, and depends upon the total sum such cumulative purchase. The single uniform schedule gives to the merchant the advantage of fair and uniform trade practice, and to the purchaser the advantage of a tax applied to his cumulative purchases as near to the 3 per cent tax paid by the merchant as can reasonably be applied. This rule does not require the use of coupons, stamps or sales-tickets and can be easily applied by every merchant, and easily understood by the customer.

Under this simple single uniform rule the customer can never be overcharged more than a fraction of a cent on any purchase or group of purchases, and is given a part of the break of fractions on taxable purchases and on tax on single purchases below ten cents.

The general scope of this new schedule has been discussed with representative merchandising groups in the state, and has met with a very pleasing degree of approval and assurance of co-operation in its observance.

New York Cotton

New York, July 24 (AP)—Cotton futures opened steady 18 to 25 points higher on leader Liverpool cables and trade buying.

Trading was active and prices held fairly steady during the early trading. October sold up to 10.56 on initial demand and after reacting to 10.50 was around 10.57 at end of the first half hour with December at 10.78 making advances of about 25 to 30 points on active positions.

After showing advances of about 25 to 30 points on the really demand business in cotton tapered off and prices sagged. December sold off to 10.50 or about 23 from the best and within 10 points of Saturday's close, but this brought in increased buying. The market at midday was steady at 10.74 for December with active months showing gains of 20 to 25 points.

The market advanced later in the day on trade and commission house buying.

Futures closed steady 36 to 42 higher; middling 10.55.

Stock Market

New York, July 24 (AP)—Financial markets started out today to get back some of the heavy losses suffered during last week's selling cyclone.

With the delayed opening at noon a large volume of buying has piled up since yesterday on the theory that the interim rally at least was almost a certainty.

While many traders were quick to get going on early advances of one to six points or more the real sag apparently was fairly well absorbed.

While shares were inclined to resume some of the early buoyancy after the first half hour, gains of around five or more points were shown by National Distillers, Auburn and U. S. Smelting. Gains of one to two or more were U. S. Steel, General Motors, Westinghouse, DuPont, Commercial Solvent, New York Central, Sears, U. S. Industrial Alcohol, American Telephone, Baltimore and Ohio.

Case was a conveyance mover dropping some 7 points under liquidation reported to be from Chicago. Transfers were 3500,00 shares.

(Continued from page one) tached to the occasion, coming as it does upon inauguration of an intense national campaign to put more money into the pockets of the people so they can buy.

As to exactly what he plans to say, however, there was no assuredly accurate telling.

The postoffice department hurried arrangements for dispatching to 5,000,000 employers the partnership agreement with the government designed for them to raise wages and restrict working hours, helping buying power and unemployment.

Hugh Johnson, the recovery administrator, took time off from his work on the proposed blanket code to open the important hearing on proposals by which the oil industry would be governed.

"The hardest problem of all," he called it, and said this meant "we need greatest co-operation."

Two Killed in Gun Fight. Chicago, July 24 (AP)—A desperate bank robber fought police with pistols in criminal courtroom today, killing Officer John Sevik before he was wounded, probably fatally, himself.

The gunman who once before had made a break from the detective bureau, was John Scheck, 20, facing trial for the robbery of a national bank at Niles Center, Ill.

Scheck was in the bull pen of the court building.

Suddenly he made a dash for liberty. Running through the chambers of Judge Matrop he went into the court room waving a revolver wildly. A bailiff shouted warning and Policeman Sevik drew his gun. Scheck fired four times and the policeman dropped dead.

Running on from the court room the desperado raced downstairs to the second story, shooting as he went.

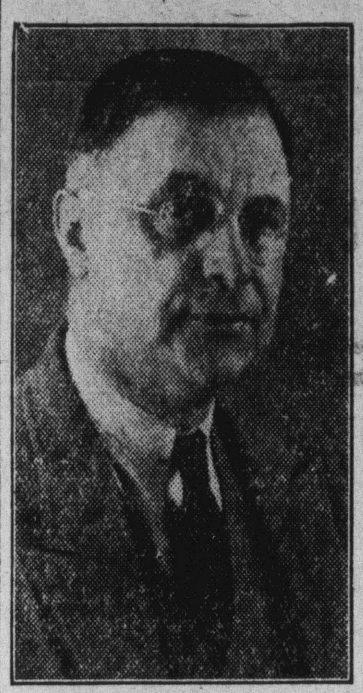

On the second floor Policeman Nathan Pixo, of the state's attorney's office, hearing the disturbance, stepped to the corridor and fired, wounding Scheck probably fatally.
