PRESIDENT NOT TO QUIT

Cuban Capital Today Counts Cost of Yesterday's Outbreak As Result of Widespread Strikes

Havana, Aug. 8.—(AP)—Strife here today counted the cost of the widespread strike in terms of a mounting death toll and a tense political situation complicated by demands that President Machado resign and his efforts to re-establish peace by armed force. Machine gunners and heavy guards withdrawn from the public buildings after upwards of 20 persons had been killed and 120 wounded in a demonstration last night that followed a report that Machado had quit but held in readiness at their barracks for any emergency today.

The A. B. C. opposition society broadcast a report that President Machado had agreed to withdraw, whereupon thousands rushed to the streets in a bilious mood. Thousands gathered at the capitol. 50 uniformed police reached the scene to be joined a few minutes later by mounted officers. In a blaze of rifle, pistol and submachine gun fire scores fell dead or wounded. Similar scenes occurred in other sections of Havana and there were demonstrations in which several were killed in nearby towns.

In consideration of payment to me of money to be raised from a processing tax on tobacco manufacturing—so that my buying power as a tobacco grower may be increased—I am willing to agree to cut my tobacco acreage the next three years (same as cigar tobacco growers).

NOW IS THE TIME TO ACT

Already several of our farmers have signed the tobacco acreage reduction blank carried in yesterday's issue of the paper and no doubt there will be still greater response as soon as there is sufficient time for the blanks to be returned to us. We are reprinting the blanks again in today's issue of the paper for the convenience of those farmers who did not use the one yesterday.

Mr. Farmer, the matter is entirely up to you. If you want government help and are willing to do your part you can get it which will assure you now and in the future a living price for your tobacco. If you believe in this plan sign up now and get your neighbor to sign too. The time is short if the plan is to be put into effect in time to help the prices for this year's crop and only by acting now can you hope to receive this help. Don't put it off. If you think this is the right way to go about it, sign up. If you don't want it, just pass it up and forget about it and then don't grumble if when you sell your tobacco you don't think you receive enough for it.

DO YOUR PART

General Johnson apparently is going after those business houses that are endeavoring to get around the industrial recovery act by shortening open hours and staggering working hours so as to get by without putting on any extra help. As it has been clearly set forth from the start, the recovery act is for the purpose of increasing employment and wages in order that mass purchasing power for the country might be restored, bringing with it a return of general prosperity throughout the land. We need not tell you whether or not you are complying with the spirit of this act. You know better than anyone else what you are doing. But for the good of yourself and of all our people we urge that you put this act into effect in spirit as well as in letter. Eventually you must comply or suffer the consequence but the main idea now is that the sooner there is united action on this matter the sooner we will have prosperity and that is what is needed right now.

The HIDDEN DOOR

By Frank L. Packard

SYNOPSIS: Colin Hewitt, writer of detective fiction, sits in Germaine Tremblay's launch, watching her movements with interest, and reflecting. He has come to Cap a l'Orage on the north shore of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, to escape the Mask, New York killer, and to deliver a mysterious letter to one Joe Lazzare. Colin calls himself Donat Howard, and though he lives at Madame Fremier's hotel, he is much with the Tremblays. Germaine thinks Lazzare may be at a fishing club nine miles from town.

Chapter 14

THE FOG

Even from upstairs in his room at the Hotel du Canada, owing to numerous stovepipe holes and the thin sheathing between the rooms, Colin could hear everything that was going on in all parts of Madame Fremier's establishment. He could hear them talking down in the general store, which also embraced the post office. Swapping gossip, asking for peas, or flour, or whatever the need of the moment might be—but he had never heard anyone asking for a letter for Joe Lazzare. Discreet inquiries had convinced him after three days that no one in Cap a l'Orage either knew or had heard of Joe Lazzare. The club therefore was the only remaining hope in this neighborhood. Dr. Tremblay had stated that on the occasion when he had visited the club, he had seen only his patient, a man named Gregg, and Mr. Kenniston. He had not heard the name of Lazzare mentioned; but that really meant nothing; just before Dr. Tremblay had taken ill. Colin drew deeply on his cigarette, frowning the club, what was he to do? Wander from place to place along the coast? That had been his original plan, but somehow now he did not want to wander from Cap a l'Orage. But Lazzare must be found.

It was not merely a matter of delivering the letter in the inside pocket of his coat. It was what the possibilities of direct contact with Lazzare might mean. Colin did not like the assumed-name business—he liked it less day by day, and hour by hour. The urge grew to be Colin Hewitt again, to resume his normal life. And the Mask stood between Lazzare and the open sesame. He looked up. She was laughing at him. "What a brown study!" she exclaimed. "And really, we're not going across the Gulf to Gaspe, you know. You are steering very badly, sir!" "So I am," he admitted as he set the boat on its course again. "I'm sorry."

"I'm not going to offer you the proverbial penny," she said. "I'm going to give you something else to think about. Look over there! Out beyond the end of the point that we're heading for."

A thin, white mist was creeping in from seaward, but there did not seem to be anything at all ominous about it. He glanced overhead. It was cloudy, of course. But it had been the first opportunity of making the trip to the club, and Germaine had certainly had no misgivings about the weather for it was she, in fact, who had proposed that they should go this afternoon. "You don't think it amounts to anything, do you?" he asked.

"It's awfully hard to tell," she answered. "You know what I told you about fog coming up around here with scarcely any warning at all. And a fog, one of our really, truly fogs, I mean, isn't nice."

Colin thought he had detected a hint of uneasiness in her voice. It disturbed him. He did not need to be told that it would be an emphatically unpleasant experience for her to be lost out here in a fog. It would be far better to leave the question of Lazzare and the club until tomorrow or even the next day.

"So a really truly fog isn't nice, eh?" he grinned. "Well then, let's forget the club. I suggest that we turn back."

would have to keep? And there are tides in here, and half-covered rocks and shoals."

"Well, then?" he challenged a little helplessly.

"Well," she smiled at him, "we go ashore before it is too late—and I like the Bonaventure and Captain Rainville, wait."

Colin touched his cap. "All right, skipper!" he said humbly. "What's the course?" "No change," she said. "Straight for the point. We're nearer there than anywhere else now anyhow. It will take us about fifteen minutes, and by that time we'll know. Those thin mists often disappear almost as quickly as they come, and if that proves to be the case in this instance, we'll continue on around the point and make for the club just as we intended to do. If it gets bad, we'll land."

"Right!" Colin responded. "It wasn't getting any better out there—so seaward. His eyes swept the coastline in turn. They were a longish way out. His lips tightened a little. He did not like the way she was speeding up the engine. Five minutes passed. A fleecy patch of mist drifted across the bow of the boat. It was growing thick out over the Gulf—gray-white scree-looker. The point, though they had been approaching it rapidly, was less distinct.

"I fancy we're in for it," Colin observed seriously.

"Yes," she said, "and for one of those real ones I was speaking about. I'm afraid. We'll have to land."

The boat sped on. The shore line began to lose its character—to seaward, nothing but that gray-white wall. It grew thicker still—a pal settling down remorselessly everywhere around them. The point itself, the objective, while still visible was, close though they were to it now, only a hazy outline. Germaine throttled down the engine to half speed.

"You called me 'skipper' a little while ago, I believe?" she questioned with mock austerity. "Absolutely!" he affirmed. "Very well, then," she commanded, "up forward with you! It's just about low tide, so keep your eyes open for partly covered rocks, and also for a sandy spot to beach the boat. Let me know when you have way enough on to make the shore."

"Aye, aye, sir!" he said heartily—and, making his way forward, took up his allotted station in the bow.

It was incredible, the opaqueness of this cursed fog and the suddenness with which it had descended upon them! He strained his eyes ahead. The boat's length seemed to be about the limit of visibility; but that looked like a sandy stretch over there a little to the left. He steered for it.

"All right!" he called out. "Shut her off! Way enough!"

And then the boat struck—struck with an impact that caused her to quiver from bow to stern. One of that infernal rocks, half covered, that Germaine had warned him about! However, it had only been a glancing blow. The boat slipped off now into deep water again, and still with some way on her forged on toward the beach.

"All right," he called out again. "Just a bump! No harm done!"

There was no answer. No good-natured quip such as he had expected.

He jerked his head around, looking over his shoulder.

He could see the length of the boat well enough—the fog, dense as it had become, did not preclude that. She was lying there motionless on the bottom of the boat beside the engine.

Washington Daybook

By HERBERT PLUMMER
Washington—Aside from the fact that congressional elections of next year will be highly significant because all the new crop of democratic representatives must run again, the senate side of the political picture must come in for consideration. In the tidal wave of votes that swept Franklin Roosevelt into the presidency in 1932, the republican Old Guard of the senate was all but engulfed.

That old wheel horse of republicanism, Jim Watson of Indiana, was shunted from a place in the national spotlight that dates back as far as 1894. Reed Smoot, dean of the senate and the epitome of G. O. P. patriotism, went down to defeat before a young professor in Utah, a novice at politics.

And George Moses, the scintillating wit and satirist of the Old Guard fell before the attack of a newcomer in national politics in New Hampshire by the name of Fred Brown.

Hore De Combat
These were the major casualties the Old Guard suffered in the fall of 1932. There were others, such as Glenn of Illinois, Bingham of Connecticut and Thomas of Idaho, all republican stalwarts.

Next year another section of the Old Guard must face the electorate. What will happen to them?

Glance down the list of those that are up for re-election in 1934. There are 17 republicans, 14 democrats and on farm-laborist.

Had the list in Austin of Vermont, as solid in his republicanism as the grant for which his state is famed. There's Fess of Ohio, republican keyholder at the Kansas City convention in 1928. Hale of Maine, who occupies the seat in the senate his father once had, is another. Dr. Hatfield of West Virginia must run. Then there's Herbert of Rhode Island, eastern campaign manager for Herbert Hoover in the 1932 presidential campaign, to say nothing of Dave Reed of Pennsylvania.

There are others such as Kean of New Jersey, Patterson of Missouri, Townsend of Delaware, Vandenberg of Michigan and Wolcott of Connecticut whose politics are as regularly republican as the clock.

As 1934 Approaches
How will the "new deal" effect the political futures of those senators? What will happen between now and the nominating and election campaign of 1934?

They admit at the present that the great game of politics is suffering from the doldrums. The wisest of them are waiting for the breaks. Some of course, already have started campaigning, but it consists for the most part in mending political fences in an unobtrusive sort of way. But 1934, after all, is not so far away. They must get under way soon and make up for lost time.

Reach for a Lucky - for always Luckies Please!

I can't help feeling that "Toasting" makes a difference

I do not treat my choice of a cigarette lightly... for, as with other little niceties of life, my cigarette is a matter of intimate concern with me. After all, I do place my cigarette between my lips! And so, when I say "Luckies Please" - I am paying a tribute to that immaculate feeling I have when smoking a Lucky. And that is my own individual reason for saying "Luckies Please!"

because "It's toasted"

HARGROVE WILL CASE TO BE TRIED OVER AGAIN

Goldboro, Aug. 7.—Retrial of the famous Hargrove will case of Sampson county is scheduled to begin in Kenansville Monday, August 14.

The case was tried last December and decided in favor of those seeking to break the will, but early last month the Supreme court ordered a new trial.

Already more than 200 witnesses have been summoned to appear in the case, said J. Fa'son Thomson, attorney for the relatives seeking to break the will.

Miss Sudie Hargrove, who lived near Faison, died a few years ago, leaving approximately $8,000 in Liberty bonds and 900 acres of fertile land to the Episcopal Church.

A nephew of the late Miss Hargrove heard of the terms of the will and entered suit to contest its provisions.

Terms of the will specified that the bonds might be sold by the church immediately, but that the land was to be sold for 100 years before it could be sold.

SEASON IN THE GROUND IS HELPFUL TO WATCH

Clinton, Aug. 8.—(AP)—J. H. Carr has a watch that, he says, seems to keep better time after being aged in the ground.

An uncle of Carr's bought the watch about 50 years ago and lost it. For 45 years the watch remained lost until it was plowed up in a field.

Carr took it to a jeweler who oiled it. The watch, Carr says, keeps perfect time.

This has been an important crop to many farmers living in eastern Carteret county.

SPORT SLANTS

Whether or not the New York Giants turn out to be the 1933 Team of Destiny, the fact is now generally recognized by National Leaguers that they probably would be the best bet of any of the contending clubs against the American League's world series entry, either the Yankees or Senators.

The basis for this is the Giants pitching staff, which has been sufficiently great this year to keep the club around or at the top with the aid of a good defense and despite strictly limited offense. Of course there is also the spritely and opportunistic of the Giants to be considered, the sort of hustling cocky play that shot the Boston Braves to the top in 1914, the Cardinals of 1926 and 1931 to the world's championship.

In Carl Hubbell, the Giants have the most talented southpaw in either league this year. They have a cagy right-hander in Freg Fitzsimmons, a really great young right-hander in Hall Schumacher, and a fast-ball fellow named Roy Parmelee who is apt to throw bird-shot at any batsman, even including Ruth and Gehrig, on one of his good afternoons. For reinforcement there are Adolfo Luque, the rejuvenated Cuban curver, Herman Bell, a right-hander of assorted experience, and William Watson Clark, the portster who has long been one of the best in the older circuit.

No 1924 Echo

The current Giants bear no resemblance to the last championship team that lost the world series to Washington in 1924, but that's no handicap to them.

Their manager, Bill Terry, played five games in that series as a substitute for Long George Kelly at first base and distinguished himself by collecting six hits in 14 times at bat for an average of .429.

Travis Jackson was in his first year as the regular Giant shortstop in 1924 but he is on the bench now while John C. (Blondy) Ryan, forges the spark for the team's defense. It is no exaggeration to say Ryan has been one of the most conspicuous factors in the rise of the Giants.

Gus Mancuso, the hustling backstop, was understudy to Jimmy Wilson of the Cardinals in the world series of 1930 and 1931, but that completes the list of any and all who have had championship experience.

Breaks? They Make 'em

The "Terriers" are making their own breaks by the pressure they keep applying to the other fellow. They talk and act more like a college football team than a professional baseball outfit.

If the Giants were worried about themselves or were they were going they would not take the chances they do. They come up with sprained ankles, charley horses, spike wounds and bumps from the blows of battle, but they don't seem to care about that, so long as they keep winning.

Their manager had a broken wrist, their star young shortstop, Blondy Ryan, was gashed badly in one leg, and their crack third sacker, Vergez, was hit in the head by one of Owen Carroll's fast balls, but you will find their names in today's box-score and tomorrow's.

New York, Aug. 8.—(AP)—Cotton futures opened steady unchanged to four higher on trading largely firm or evening up for the government crop report. The market continued irregular later in the morning. Trading was not active and appeared to be mostly small lots but there were alternating spurts on covering or liquidation.

The market closed fairly steady 27 to 30 lower. Spots quiet; middling 9.60.

Stock Market

New York, Aug. 8.—(AP)—The stock market showed signs of arousing from its lethargy today but irregularities in grain and cotton were conducive to further slumber. Gains of one to around three points were recorded in shares of National Distillers, U. S. Industrial and American Commercial alcohol. Homestead mining jumped 15 points and Alaska Juneau was up a point. Other shares advancing fractionally to around a point or more were American Can, Wasinghous, Chrysler, U. S. Steel, Industrial Rayon and Leggett Meyers B.

Miners to Go Back To Work
 Uniontown, Pa., Aug. 8.—(AP) More than 100 heads of United Miners locals representing 20,000 miners voted unanimously today to return to work in the soft coal field of southwestern Pennsylvania.

Present Agreements.

Raleigh, Aug. 8.—(AP)—Telephone companies in general in this state today presented arguments to the State Corporat on Commission vigorously opposing lowering of certain rates but some companies did not oppose the order, Commissioner J. Stanley W. borne said.

The argument of the companies opposing proposed changes centered on extension of the base rate areas to conform to city or municipal boundaries and to proposed reductions in connection and service charges.

Opposition was registered by the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph company to every portion of the commission's order but General Counsel E. D. Smith of Atlanta, said no fight would have been made if the commission had only ordered reduction to 25 cents per month on the monophone or French type telephone.

Fred J. Turner, Carolina manager for the Southern Bell Company, read a lengthy brief setting forth that the company was earning less than a fair return on its exchange investment in the state and closed with a declaration that the lowering of the rates as proposed would be confiscatory of the company's property and a violation of the fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution.

IT TAKES HEALTHY NERVES TO WIN THE BRITISH OPEN!

ABOVE—IN RATING THE POPULAR CIGARETTES, Shute says, "Camels are milder, and what is even more important to any golfer, they do not jangle the nerves."

ABOVE—TWO CONTINENTS CHEERED when slender Densmore Shute, brilliant young American golfer, with wrists of steel and nerves that never wavered, won the British Open—the tenth American champion in ten years!

Steady Smokers turn to Camels

When it comes to healthy nerves, "DENNY" SHUTE speaks with authority. "I couldn't have won the British Open if my nerves hadn't been in perfect condition," says Shute. "Healthy nerves are essential to any golfer who wants to turn in a good score. The enjoyment of cigarettes has not interfered with my golf game because I have smoked Camels right along. I have tried all the brands and long ago found that Camels are milder, and what is even more important to any golfer, they do not jangle the nerves."

"Denny" Shute offers conclusive evidence that Camels are milder. That they don't interfere with healthy nerves. That smokers like Camels better, the more they smoke them. Consider the fact that Camels are made from costlier tobaccos—and switch to them yourself. You will also discover that Camels are better for steady smoking.

How are Your Nerves?

IT IS MORE FUN TO KNOW

Camels are made from finer, MORE EXPENSIVE tobaccos than any other popular brand. Leaf tobaccos for cigarettes can be bought from 5¢ a pound to $1.00...but Camel pays the millions more that insure your enjoyment.
