The early morning sailing was in accordance with the desire of Byrd that the ship finish refueling at Bayonne, N. J., in ample time to reach Norfolk Sunday.

Admiral Byrd said last night that the Bear of Oakland, his other ship, would leave Wilmington today to join the Ruppert at Norfolk. Byrd said the Bear had been held up at Wilmington because of a towing charge considered exorbitant, but that a Boston manufacturing concern had agreed to take care of the charge.

Crowley, who surrendered immediately after the shooting which marked his return to the tabernacle to take charge as the legal pastor under court order, was taken to jail in another city for safe-keeping.

BAPTISTS END MEETING HERE

Roanoke Association Adjourns After Two Addresses This Afternoon

With two addresses ringing in their ears, Baptists of the Roanoke Association returned to their homes this afternoon after concluding the two-day session as guests of the two Greenville churches.

Sessions of the association were held in Jarvis Memorial Methodist Church by reason of the limited seating capacity of the Baptist churches, and the six hundred or more ministers and delegates from the six counties comprising the association were afforded ample seating accommodations for discussion of business and for listening to addresses by leading ministers of the denomination.

After completing the odds and ends of business at 2:15 the association turned its attention to an address by E. McNeil Potat, Jr., of Wake Forest, on "The Local Church in the Special Order." It was regarded as the high light of the two days' session and showed what a tremendous influence the local church brings to bear on the social order of the various communities of the world.

Olin T. Binkley delivered the final address on "Christ the Head of the Church." The speaker brought out many important facts in connection with the leadership of Christ, showing that He is the leading influence in the life of all denominations.

Special music interspersed the addresses. Four addresses marked last night's session, and the speakers were Hugh Johnson, Charles B. Howard, Hugh G. Latimer, and J. L. Peacock. Each of the addresses dealt with some phase of church work and contained important facts to those interested in expanding work of the denomination.

John Coley, re-elected moderator for the sixth consecutive year, presided over the sessions. David J. Wheeler, Jr., was elected vice-moderator, and Leslie Newman of Bethel, clerk.

The visitors expressed appreciation of the fine spirit of hospitality evident on all sides and declared the gathering one of the best in years.

A few minutes before when the ship flew over Liberty, company officials said it had radioed that all was well, and that before that it had landed at Cleveland and passed over Toledo.

THE WAY TO BETTER BUSINESS

In a recent letter sent out by Recovery Administrator Johnson to manufacturers and advertisers he pointed out that the best and quickest way to better business now was through the generous use of newspaper advertising.

Here, in part, is what Mr. Johnson says, and we pass it on to our local merchants for their information and guidance:

"We believe that the opportune moment is at hand for American industry to bend every effort toward increased sales.

"The modern method is advertising. The American public looks to advertising for news of good merchandise and good values.

"There has never been a time when the public was so alert for news, as now. Events have moved so rapidly that people would be completely ignorant of what is going on if they did not closely follow the press.

"This tremendous public interest in news can be capitalized by American industry. And the way to do it is to place the news about a good value or a good product side by side with other news of the world."

KEEP YOUR FIRE "INSIDE THE STOVE!"

Thousands of people will find it difficult to keep warm this winter, but others will overdo the heating proposition—their stoves or heating plants will set their houses on fire. The colder months bring an increase in fire losses.

According to the records of the National Board of Fire Underwriters for 1931, defective chimneys and flues accounted for a fire loss of 26 million dollars; hot ashes, coals and open fires 6 1-4 million dollars; and stoves, furnaces, boilers and their pipes 24 3-4 millions—a total of over 57 million dollars—actually 11 per cent of the annual total from all causes.

Specifications for installing a safe chimney, heating plant or stove are usually found in city building codes or may be obtained from your insurance agent.

In the main, chimneys should be solidly constructed from the ground up and should contain flues made of fire clay. The heating units themselves and the pipes should be set up at a safe distance from all burnable material.

Outrageous Fortune by Patricia Wentworth

STORIES: The man Nesta Riddell claimed as her husband, had told her she had stolen the Van Berg emeralds and shot their cousin. Flashes of memory he could not drive home made him fear she tells the truth. Caroline Leigh thought the man might be Jim Randal, her cousin. Nesta would not let her see him, however. Now Caroline has caught sight of a man wearing her cousin's life at night. He looks a little like Jim. She follows him, she is sure it is Jim!

Chapter 21 THE MEETING

"Jim—what's the matter? Why do you look like that, as if you didn't know me?" He said in a heavy, shaken voice, "I don't—know you."

The hands let go of his arm; she stepped back. He had a sense of emptiness and loss.

And then she was laughing—such a pretty laugh, low, and full of some thing that was very young and innocent.

"But I'm Caroline! Darling—didn't you guess? I don't call that a bit bright of you. Who did you think I was?"

He shook his head. "I don't know... Caroline?"

Caroline stopped laughing, because something in the slow tentative way in which he said, "Caroline?" made her stop.

"Jim—what's the matter? Jim darling?"

After a moment he said, "Why do you call me that?"

And all at once Caroline began to feel cold. The dream was changing in the way dreams do. One minute she had found Jim and her heart was singing with joy, and the next there was a vague something that was cold and frightening. She didn't know what it was, and that made it worse.

"What do you mean, Jim?" and he might hear up in a loud harsh voice, "Why do you call me Jim? Jim what?"

Caroline said, "Oh!" and backed away.

"Jim—what's the matter?" "Jim what?"

"Aren't you well?"—That was just a whisper.

He controlled his voice. "Tell me why you called me Jim."

"Because it's your name. Don't you know?"

"No."

"Jim darling, don't you know that you're Jim Randal?"

He went past her in a blundering sort of way—right past her and as far as the stone steps, which led up to the heavy door. He sat down on the second step and leaned over his knees with both hands covering his face. It was just as if a dam had broken. All those things which had been battering against his consciousness came flooding in through the breach. He was giddy and buffeted.

He sat there, and knew that he was Jim Randal, and that this was Hale Place where he had grown up. This was Hale Place, and he was Jim Randal. But of course he was Jim Randal.

Who was Jim Riddell? "You're Jim Riddell, and I'm your wife."

Who had said that? Nesta—Nesta Riddell. "I'm Nesta"—"I'm Caroline." Nesta—Caroline—Jim... Jim Riddell—Jim Randal.

HE lifted his head like a man coming up out of deep water.

"I'm Jim Randal, and this is Hale Place."

Caroline was sitting on the step beside him. Her hand came out and touched his.

"Didn't you know?" "No."

"Oh, Jim! But you know now."

"Yes." He gave her hand a squeeze. "It's awfully odd—" He stopped, laughed a little uncertainly, and let go of her. "Odd? It makes my head go round!"

Caroline did not speak. She didn't really want to speak. She wanted to sit quite still and let the knowledge that Jim wasn't drowned soak right down into her. It was like silver water coming in with waves of joy. It was like a tide of light and happiness.

She didn't feel dizzy like Jim; she felt safely, blessedly secure and fixed. Everything was right again, and Jim was here; if she put out her hand, she could touch him. But she didn't really want to put it out.

Just for the moment she had all the happiness that she could hold. One drop more, and it might brim over and drain away. When he got up, she leaned her shoulder against the stone balustrade which flanked the steps and watched him with shining eyes.

He walked to the edge of the grass and, turning, looked again at the house. That was just how she had seen him from her window. How long ago? Half an hour? It was very strange to think that the world could change and be quite a different world to you in half an hour.

Jim stood and looked at the house. He looked at it for a long time. Then he walked to the edge of the gravel sweep and back again. He did this several times, and just as the end of a little whispering dread stirred in Caroline's mind.

She pulled herself up by the balustrade and stood on the step above him. He said, "Caroline, I'm in a mess."

So that was why she had begun to be afraid. She said, "What sort of a mess, Jim?"

"I don't know that it's fair to tell you—in fact it's not. I'm confused still, but I do know that. You oughtn't even to be here."

"How dreadful!" said Caroline. "Where else ought I to be?"

"In bed—and you'd better be getting along, my dear. I don't know how you came here at all."

"Oh, I followed you. All romantic, darling—it really was, I looked out of my window, and you lifted up the latch and came into the garden and stood looking up. And I knew you at once, so I followed you. And if you think, after that, I'm going back to bed without hearing all about everything, well, you've just got to think again, darling—and quite differently."

THIS was a Caroline he knew—a sweet, imperious, gently obstinate Caroline, with a laugh in her voice and a coaxing hand on his arm. Since she could speak at all he had been "Jim darling." He said heavily, "All the same, you'd better go."

"As if I would! Jim—tell me—what's the matter?" "Go home, Caroline!"

"You're home."

He pulled away from her roughly. "Don't talk nonsense!" Then, on a changed note, "Caroline—go!"

The laugh went out of her voice as she said, "You know I won't go. You know I won't."

"I know you ought to."

"We ought to do lots of things that we don't do. And this is one of the things that I'm not going to do."

She came down from the steps and slid a hand through his arm. Her voice dropped on to a deep loving note.

"It's no use, darling—you've got to tell me. Better get it over. You can't make me go."

"I ought to be able to make you."

"Come and sit down," said Caroline seriously. "Now, Jim—what have you been doing, and why did you let me think you had been drowned?" Her voice went down into despairing depths.

"Did you?"

"Yes—in the Alice Arden. And there was an S.O.S. about a man in hospital at Elston, who had lost his memory, and I went to see if it was you, and they said—Jim, they said that he had just been fetched away by his wife. That wasn't you?"

"Yes."

"How could it be you?" "It was."

"How could it be?" Jim was silent. He did not know of any answer to her question.

She went on in a trembling voice. "I went to Ledlington. The nurse said you had my letter—a bit of it—the bit with my name—with Caroline—so I went. But it wasn't you, Jim—it wasn't you."

"You went to Ledlington?" "I found the woman. She dropped a bill, and the nurse gave it to me, so I found her. Her name was Riddell—Mrs. Riddell. She was the most horrible woman. But it was her husband who was in the hospital at Elston—it wasn't you."

Jim did not speak. He looked through the moonlight to the dark trees.

"It was her husband," Caroline said in a whisper. "It couldn't be you—you're not her husband."

He spoke then in a loud, harsh voice. "She says I am."

The Nature Class

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER Rip, head master of the Puddle Middle School, barked a loud announcement when he found he could not keep order. "Today Jelly Bear and Honey Bear will take the pupils for a nature study walk."

As soon as the Bears started off, with the pupils following them, Rip curled up and went to sleep in the sunshine. He was quite exhausted.

All the little Ducks and Chickens were carrying their slates with them so they could write down what the Bears told them about the woods. Then they would study this for their home work and would recite their lessons the next day.

"Now here," growled Jelly Bear, pointing to some bushes, "are berries which are good to eat. 'Grow-grow!', he exclaimed suddenly, 'I really don't feel well at all. I simply must sit down and have a rest. Honey Bear! You continue with the nature class and lead the pupils a good distance away as I must have quiet."

"All I need is a short rest," growled Jelly Bear. "I'll be all right if I have that." So Honey Bear walked on with her little pupils.

Suddenly she stopped. "Children," she growled, "I don't feel well either. I think we must have had something for supper last night that didn't agree with us. Just walk on through the woods and make notes on your slates of what you see and I'll catch up with you in a few minutes."

The nature class walked on through the woods, scratching notes on their slates of what they saw and stopping to eat seeds. But the hours passed and the Bears did not appear.

GREENVILLE TOBACCO MARKET REPORT

Greenville Market Monday Sold 1,497,364 Pounds For $231,851.59

AVERAGE $15.48

If you have tobacco to sell, and really interested in selling it where you can get the most money for it your attention is called to the following averages of the various tobacco markets last Friday, as published by the News and Observer.

Greenville led all Eastern Carolina during the entire week in prices paid for tobacco.

Greenville Average $13.67

Greenville Paid This Much More On Every 1,000 lbs. Sold

Table with 4 columns: Market Name, Price per 1000 lbs, Greenville Price, and Difference. Rows include Wilson ($12.39), Kinston ($11.44), Rocky Mount ($12.64), Farmville ($13.23), and Greenville ($13.67).

Many of the markets report only "estimated" averages, and others make no report at all.

No market excels Greenville, grade for grade at anytime.

You will not find the tobacco buyers on any market cooperating in every way more splendidly than the buying forces on the Greenville Tobacco Market. This fact alone is more responsible for Greenville being the world's largest Bright Tobacco market than any one factor. When such conditions as this exist on a tobacco market, better prices for the growers is always the result.

Everybody has observed that an overwhelming per cent of the offerings have been common tips, which of course brings down the general average. Notwithstanding this, Greenville market this week is averaging more than any Eastern Carolina market according to published figures. When the market begins to sell a larger per cent of the better grades, we believe that more than parity average will be realized.

Let us suggest that every one preserve warehouse bills of sales and see that they are dated.

Tune in on Greenville's Radio Station WEED every day (except Sunday) at 9:45 A. M., 12:45 P. M. and 4:45 P. M. for latest tobacco market reports. Will find it on your dial around 142 or 1420.

Trotman as guardian of his four children for $780,000 which was alleged to have been dissipated from a trust fund set up for the children by their grandfather, the late E. M. Bohannon, wealthy tobacco manufacturer.

Under the terms of the agreement, all property, assets and securities in the hands of Fred S. Hutchins, receiver of the trust fund, are to be turned over to Trotman. They are estimated to amount to $100,000 or more.

Trotman brought his suit against his wife, Mrs. Maucie Channon Trotman, former trustee for the trust fund, and the insurance company, which was her bondsman, jointly. At the same time the agreement was made with Trotman, the bonding company executed a covenant with Mrs. Trotman in which it agreed she is not to be sued in any future actions.

Trotman agreed to deliver to the bonding company all rights he or the estate may have against the American Trust Company, the Merchants and Farmers National Bank and W. T. Shore, all of Charlotte. It was through deals involving Shore, a prominent attorney of Charlotte, that a portion of the trust fund is alleged to have been dissipated. He has been indicted here in two counts for embezzlement.

DR. GRIER SPEAKS TO COLLEGE STUDENTS

Dr. I. C. Grier, Business Manager of the Thomasville Orphanage who is here attending the Keanoke Baptist Association, made a strong and delightful talk to the students of East Carolina Teachers College. He proved that he has not lost his grip on problems of college students. It has been only a short time since he served his connection with Appalachian State Teachers College as Professor of History in order to devote his full time to orphanage work.

He gave the three most important things a student should get from his years in a teachers' college. He first, showed the need for the teacher to take interest in people and children. He drew on his actual experience with children of the orphan's home where the chief concern is to snatch girls and boys from wrecked lives. In developing the second point he made one realize that college students should make wise choices. His third point was that one should develop a keen sense of appreciation of life.

His talk was richly illustrated with delightful stories and experiences.

MOUNTAINS TO COME TO AID OF THE COAST

MAKE PLANS FOR HANDLING GAME CROWDS

Chapel Hill, Oct. 10.—The arrangement of entrances and seats at Kenan stadium has been revised with a view to speedier and better handling of the large crowd expected for the Carolina-Georgia game here Saturday.

The changes, which were prompted partly by the wide interest being manifested in this game by the heavy advance ticket sale and partly by the inauguration of a half-price general admission section, were announced today by R. A. Feltzer, director of athletics.

A general admission section has been set off at the west end of each side of the regular stands, Mr. Feltzer said. The two sections will accommodate 2,500 people on each side of the field. The charge for admission will be exactly half the price of reserved seats.

Holders of reserved tickets on the north or visitors' side will be admitted through the main or number two gate as before. But the entrance for Carolina students and holders of reserved tickets on the south side will be changed to the larger gate number six which is at the middle of the stadium directly behind the press box.

WOLF PACK OVER RATED SAYS SMITH

College Station, Raleigh, Oct. 10.—What's the matter with North Carolina State's Wolfpack?

That's a football question many fans in this and other sections would like to have answered. Coach Clipper Smith answered it weeks before the opening game with Outback when he said newspapers and fans were over-rating the power of the Wolfpack.

Smith was somewhat disturbed at that time. State was being picked to finish at the top by reason of its having 12 monogram players of the 1932 team on hand. These men with a couple of reserves and several sophomores of the 1932 freshman team constituted the material from which the 1933 varsity was to be made.

"I wish that we might live up to what is predicted for us, but it will be hard. We will have a first team equal or a shade better than last season, but our reserve strength will be weaker," Coach Smith said around the middle of September and time has borne out his wisdom.

The Clemson game Saturday taught the Pack a good lesson. The papers had picked the Wolves to win easily and they entered the game with that feeling. Clemson was playing before the "home folks" and promptly set out to knock the Wolves off their feet. This the Tigers did and the Wolves never got going.

This Saturday the feeling will be different. State is due to take a licking from the Florida Gators when it meets them on Riddick Field at night, but the Gators will have a tough battle. Smith plans to shake the first team in several places this week, giving some of the sophomores and junior reserves a chance to show their strength and as a result the coach hopes to have additional reserve strength Saturday to start the climb upward.

Seal's Back In Fashion's Favor Again

By RITA FERRIS (Associated Press Fashion Editor) Paris.—(AP)—Seal is back in the fashion parade. The soft pliable fur, long lost to fashion's favor, returns this year in coats, muffs, trimmings and hats. A rich bronze and black are the colors in which its generally appears. Coats Seal-Trimmed Seal trims appear on many winter coats. One designer displays a black wool coat trimmed with a deep cape collar of black seal, another exhibits an olive-green wool coat with a small high collar and cuffs of bronze-brown seal, and a third finishes a gray ensemble with a scarf collar of black seal. Both long and three-quarter length coats made of the same soft fur are displayed as smart winter wraps. One chic afternoon coat is a three-quarter length model of black seal faced with ermine. Another is a full-length model of bronze-brown seal collared in toy dyed the same shade. A Touch of 1910 Hip-length seal capes and big seal muffs give a 1910 touch to a number of winter costumes. The muffs are Little seal toques appear with costumes trimmed in the same fur. They are made on trim lines recalling a Russian Cossack cap and are worn slightly tilted over the right eyebrow.

New York Cotton

New York, Oct. 11.—(AP)—Cotton futures opened barely steady six lower to one higher with steady Liverpool cables offset by favorable weather and southern selling. A favorable weekly and crop bulleting report, liquidation and selling set prices down a few points, but the market showed a tendency to rally on evidence of trade demand at lower levels. Outside interests to was limited and the market as a whole was quiet. December declined to 9.37 after selling early at 9.43 while May sold from 9.81 down to 9.75 and rallied to 9.80. The market ruled quiet in the morning as southern offerings tapered off. December rallied from 9.37 to 9.43 with general market advancing two to several points above previous closing levels. At midday prices were within a point or so of these quotations.

N. Y. Stock Market

New York, Oct. 11.—(AP)—The idling financial market moved sleepily today showing little inclination to do anything decisively. It was one of the duller sessions in a number of weeks. With all American markets closed tomorrow for the celebration of Columbus day the board room was almost deserted by operators who were stretching out the holiday. Equities, grains, cotton and other commodities backed and filled with the tone generally a bit easier. While a few stock specialties im-

Escape Attempt Balked By Legion

Sousse, Tunisia.—(AP)—Two persistent German soldiers, William Schultzky and Peter Bohlen, are charged with trying to steal, poison, buy, shoot and swim their way out of the Foreign Legion in one of the most cinematic French leaves on record.

The harder they tried, it seems, the more of a jam they got into until their escapades took the form of a movie thriller. The two legionnaires, no longer fond of the life imposed by the French military regulations on the First Regiment stationed here, far from their native Berlin, decided to desert, the authorities charge. Flat broke in the way of money, their first thought was to overcome that handicap. Bohlen, so the record reads, attempted to poison a captain, whose orderly he was, by serving a sleeping potion with his lunch. The officer did not like the appearance of the water presented to him and refused to drink it. Bohlen bided his time. Came the siesta hour and Bohlen, profiting by the sleep of his superior, profound enough without the soporific, stole his boots, a camera and 400 francs. Part of the money he gave to a stranger he had met in a cafe who had promised to put him and Schultzky on a steamer bound for Malta. Whereupon the stranger disappeared from the picture.

(Continued from page one) call for a portion of the $6,000,000 issue of 4th liberty bonds. An announcement was expected later in the day. The issue can be called at any time before October 16 for protection April 15. Officials found it advisable to call the issue because of the disruptive effect such action might have on the bond market. No indication was given of the amount to be called. Mention McAdoo In Probe. Washington, Oct. 11.—(AP)—Senator McAdoo, Democrat of California, was named to Senate investigators today by a member of Dillon, Read and Company as counsel for the concern when it floated a $12,000,000 South American loan in 1921, now in default. The bonds floated by Dillon, Read and Company for Rio De Janeiro are now selling for $8 to $16 on each $100 par value. Robert O. Hayward, member of the firm, said McAdoo was counsel in straightening out legal difficulties to permit the company to handle the issue. Clarence Dillon, senior partner of the company, testified before the probers that most of the loss by his firm's investment trust were stocks in which directors of the company were interested.

overboard with a punch in the jaw. Fished From the Sea Schultzky, who didn't know how to swim, started to sink. Bohlen, meanwhile, jumped into the sea and swam toward shore. He was seized, however, when he reached land, while the boat's crew fished out Schultzky. Under a strong escort this time, the two hapless legionnaires were turned over to gendarmes at Sousse. Freda Schild, a hotel chambermaid also arrested and accused of complicity, subsequently was released. Her role, if any, was not revealed.
