London, Dec. 19.—(AP)—Samuel Insull, former American utilities operator, wanted in the United States to face charges of embezzlement, will be treated as any other American citizen if he applies for a British visa provided his passport is reinstated, it was learned here today.

His claim is opposed by Samuel A. Elson, former corporation counsel, on the ground that his fees were a part of the original set-up, and in yesterday's hearings before U. S. Judge Evan A. Evans in Federal District Court said that the issue was overshadowed by relations of bankers and other events that transpired prior to the collapse of the utility empire.

Fighting Ends Until Close Of Yuletide Season

PERMANENT PEACE WILL BE SOUGHT

Paraguay and Bolivia Agree to Halt Bloody Warfare Until the End of the Christmas Season

Montevideo, Dec. 19.—(AP)—Paraguay and Bolivia agreed today to halt the bloody warfare in the Chaco Boreal until at least the end of the Christmas season.

Both nations told the Pan-American Conference in session here, and its host, the Uruguayan government, that they were willing to stop hostilities until midnight of December 31.

President Gabriel Terra, of Uruguay, who is also head of the American conference in session here, announced last night he had accepted the Paraguayan proposal for a temporary cessation of hostilities.

During the period of quiet in the triangular wilderness which has been in dispute a half century, conference leaders hoped to see permanent peace effected.

President Terra already has proposed that delegates from the two countries meet in Montevideo with members of the League of Nations Peace Commission.

Announcement that Bolivia had agreed to the truce in the conflict in which thousands have been slain in recent months, was followed by wildest enthusiasm here.

SCHOOLS END FOR HOLIDAYS

City and County Systems Suspend Work This Afternoon For Christmas

City and county schools closed today for observance of the Christmas holidays. City schools will resume work January 3 and county schools January 1.

The Greenville system suspended work shortly after noon and county schools were to close following completion of the day's work.

Delightful exercises in connection with the Christmas season were held at the majority of county schools yesterday and last night and hundreds of patrons were in attendance.

The exercises consisted of Christmas trees, rendering of Yuletide music, and proved probably the most delightful of years.

In the high school building here last night sixth and seventh grade children of the Third Street school presented a cantata, "The Angel and the Star." It was given under direction of Miss One Shindler, music supervisor, with Miss Mosele Jones as director, Miss Shindler, accompanist, and Miss Eva Keeter, director of tableaux.

The cantata centered around the birth of the Christ Child, and both the music and costumes were unusually good, and the big crowd was well rewarded for attending.

PAYROLL FOR PUBLIC WORKS MOUNTS HERE

Around $10,000 to be Paid Out to Relief Labor in Pitt This Week

Federal funds appropriated for public works in this community are going to give Santa Claus quite a boost this week-end, and hundreds of families will be able to experience joy they would not have experienced had it not been for the public works program.

K. T. Futrell, Director of Public Works Administration in this county, said today that approximately $10,000 would be paid out for relief labor the end of this week as against $6,700 the previous week.

He stated that Pitt County's quota of 1,023 men would probably be assigned to work before the end of the week. Seven hundred were on pay-rolls today, about 150 workmen having been assigned to jobs yesterday and a similar number today.

Mr. Futrell said a sufficient number of projects had already been approved in this county to absorb the entire quota of workmen and that they were being sent to jobs as fast as the unemployment office could pave the way for them.

The public works pay-roll, he said, has been increasing around 25 per cent each week since the program got under way several weeks ago, and that with additional men to be put to work this week, pay envelopes would reach their capacity load by the close of the week.

This means the spirit of Christmas will find its way to hundreds of homes this year, and that much of the drabness evident last year will disappear under the influence of money jingling in the jeans of the relief workers and the comforts which this will provide.

TWO BOUND OVER IN ROBBERY OF TUTENS

Washington, Dec. 19.—A preliminary hearing in the case of Durwood and Randolph Whitford, charged with the theft of $2,000 taken ten days ago from the home of Calvin and Warren Tutens, prominent farmers of Small, Beaufort County, was held here today before Justice of the Peace E. L. Thompson.

Thompson ordered that the Whitford men be held under $10,000 bond each for Superior Court which convenes here in January. Price was ordered released, due to insufficient evidence.

Much interest centered around this case, the court house being filled completely with friends of the Tutens and of the trio. The three men have been kept in separate cells since their confinement. They were fingerprinted shortly after being brought here.

Durwood Whitford, one of the trio, is said to have been the man who bound Calvin Tutens and blindfolded him with tape. When captured, Whitford had a sore finger, which Tutens says he bit when he was being tried.

FORBIDDEN VALLEY by William Byron Mowery

SYNOPSIS: Curt Teagson has slipped away from his camp in the Canadian wilderness and a little later he and his partner, Paul St. Clair, have picked up Sonya Volkov, saved her from certain death at the hands of the Klondike Indians, and Curt has fallen in love with her. Now he finds she has sent a letter desiring her love to Igor Karakhan, millionaire crook whom Curt is trying to bring to justice. Unable to face Sonya's treachery, Paul too saddles away from camp.

Chapter 32 CURT DECIDES

PAUL wondered if Curt would throw up his Karakhan case altogether. What a stew Sonya had made of it! Except for her, they would already have closed in on the man. Not only had they wasted precious days, but their best hope had gone glimmering, the hope of shadowing LeNoir, for without a doubt he suspected them now and would never let them follow him to his chieft.

Occasionally he glanced down toward the Iskitimwah mouth, but saw nothing of his partner. A little before noon he could stand it no longer. Dropping down lake, he landed and walked back into the pines.

Curt was sitting against a boulder, tracing meaningless patterns on the wolf-foot with a stick. He was plunged into deep thought, motionless, a dead pipe in his teeth. His face was gray and haggard, his eyes had a hard light in them; and when he looked up and smiled, it was a bitterly cynical smile.

But in spite of those ravages and of the many times when Paul had seen the steely self-control that lay deep-down in Curt, he was surprised that his partner could have taken so terrible a blow and then, within the space of a few hours, could have shaken it off and got himself in hand. He no longer seemed confused and bewildered, as last night at the sentry rocks.

Curt pointed with the stick. "See that pair of black lilies there, nodding their heads together? The smaller one is Sonya Volkov, and the other is her Cossack. I'm going to pull Karakhan's head off in a minute. I'll do it as an agent of the law, and not out of any jealousy over her. Lord, no!—I couldn't be jealous of anything that he owns. I'll take the blissen over and give it to her, and then, after we nail him, I'll tell her what I meant by it."

"Nail him? You're still going ahead with this hunt?"

"Why not? We started it, we'll go through with it. And from now on there'll be no more pussyfooting or generosity to strangers. I want to get through with this mess and get back down north to our Three Rivers country. I've been thinking of the Nahanni Mountains. Prospecting in the Nahanni will be a good way for a fellow to forget."

He got up, put on his jacket, and plucked the taller of the two black lilies. Over the other one he hesitated a moment. A shudder went through him as he took hold of it. But then with a savage gesture he jerked it up by the roots and flung it away, and brushed his hands.

"How're you going to find him?" Paul queried. "LeNoir is suspicious of us. He won't ever let us shadow him now."

"We won't try to shadow LeNoir. We've got an easier way of finding Karakhan. Sonya Volkov has been hard luck for us so far, but we're going to turn her into good luck. We'll use her. It's only fair; she used us."

"Use her—?"

"Well, she's going to him, isn't she? What's to prevent you and me from following her? She'll be a dozen times easier to shadow than that bush-slinker. We'll use her as our bait. She's a pretty bait. When she goes to join him, we'll go along; and when she gets there, we'll be there too!"

AFTER a day and night of hard traveling, LeNoir stood in Karakhan's cabin once again. "D's is your," he said, and with no other explanation he handed over Sonya's letter.

"Mine?" Karakhan echoed, struck all in a heap. "It's for me, you say?" His face turned ashy. "Who knows I'm here? Who in hell pumped that out of you?"

LeNoir trembled. "Read heem," he urged. "You understand, den."

His eyes went to the table behind Karakhan where lay his chief's heavy automatic. He backed up a step, and his fingers closed over an iron-tipped ski staff leaning against the wall. If this girl was no friend of his chief's but an enemy who was playing some infinitely clever game, Karakhan might shoot him in his tracks.

Karakhan ripped the envelope and held the letter to the window where the gray dawn-light was filtering through. In bewilderment he scanned the first few lines, then whipped over to the last page and glanced at the signature to see who his correspondent was.

"Sonya Volkov!"

"Den you know her? She no lie to me?"

The question went past the Russian unheard—he had turned back to the first page and was reading the letter with an intensity that shut out everything except the words before him.

Even yet LeNoir could not tell whether his chief would burst out at him in a fury or would fill his pocket with money, as the girl had said he would. He watched anxiously.

But then, little by little, he saw how his chief was taking it. Karakhan's anger and astonishment passed swiftly and changed to disbelief, as though he simply could not credit his good fortune; and then came a leaping exultation which his habitual cold mask could not quite hide.

"Where is she, LeNoir?" The pages quivered in his unsteady hands. "Why the devil didn't you bring her along with you, man?"

LeNoir drew a breath of immense relief and his jumpy nerves smoothed themselves out. The girl had spoken the truth!

"She down der at dat camp w' de u'ders," he explained. Thinking this a good chance to impress Karakhan with his caution, he added: "How I know wedder she talkit straight or not? I don't know she aw-right, until you say. Me, I don't tell nobody w'ere you hide, and I don't breeng no strangers here."

"But you should—No, I suppose you did do right, since you didn't know the—uh, circumstances. Sit down. I'll get some coffee for us."

AS LeNoir eased onto the wall bench his glance strayed out the window to the landwash where half a dozen lean honey-colored huskies were nosing along the water edge for dead fish. A pistol shot east of the hangar fourteen birch-bark canoes lay side by side on the sand like basking seals; and in the timber just behind them smoke was rising from three big campfires. The party was the Black Grizzly and his men, on their way south.

They had come a hundred miles without stopping even for food, and another hundred lay ahead of them. The sight of them comforted LeNoir a lot, after his two dismal failures to wipe out Raiston's party. He certainly could use thirty more men on the job. One swoop and smash, and the business would be done.

The Russian came out of the boarded-off kitchen with a pot of coffee. He poured two tins and laced them with brandy. LeNoir drained his cup at a gulp. Slowly sipping his, Karakhan listened while LeNoir told him of the happenings down river.

About the two suspicious strangers who were drawing closer and closer to his hiding, the Russian asked no questions just then. He was unable to focus his thoughts on that pair—the sentences of Sonya Volkov's letter were galloping too madly through his mind, and his emotions were too much in a turmoil over her. She was near him, within a hundred miles! In five or six days more she would be there with him!

LeNoir suggested carefully, "She tell me dat you be veree 'blige' for me breeng you dis letter and you pay me someting, mebbe." He thought it good policy to mention the money matter while his chief was still in the first flush of elation and more likely to be generous. "Wen I go on dat weelaw islan' I take beeg chance on walk into trap; and den I make his long treeep fas'er'n hell."

Karakhan took out a billfold, selected a yellow note and passed it over. LeNoir blinked his eyes as he saw the denomination—two 0's trailing a 5. His chief had always paid him very handsomely, but half a thousand dollars, for one trip—the girl's letter must have hit Karakhan hard!

"There'll be others like tha," his chief assured, "when you bring her here to me. Several others. You'd better get some sleep now. Slam-Klae's outfit got in just a little while ago and they won't be ready to start on till nearly noon."

Christina, the Christmas Doll by Sigrid Arne

SYNOPSIS: Ice and snow fairies rescue Christina, a doll from the castle of the One-Legged Giant. They start off back to Santa's Toyshop, but danger lies ahead of them.

CHAPTER VIII CHRISTINA IS BEWITCHED

Christina and the snow men and the ice fairies didn't get back to Toyland right away. They had to travel so far that finally Christina's little friends had to sit on the snow to rest their wings.

"Poor, tired ones," said Christina. "Here, I'll make you cushions," and she rolled up tiny snow balls behind their backs so they could rest.

Then she stepped into the middle of their circle and exclaimed, "Oh I'm so happy I'm going to dance." It was such an odd scene that the stars in the sky came rushing over head to watch. They threw a bright light on the little red figure of the doll twirling and skipping on the snow. Soon the fairies were all humming and everyone was happy.

But then, danger near by. Out from behind a big pine tree crept a white fox with a long tail and blazing red eyes. Suddenly he stood right over the fairies' circle and barked at Christina: "You must come back to my kingdom with me!"

The poor little doll! The Queen of Fairies had meant to be kind to her. She had said every one would love Christina. But here was a white fox wanting her. And no little doll likes to live among foxes.

"Go away, go away," said Christina, stamping her little foot on the snow. "I won't go with you."

Like a flash the fox was gone and there stood the proudest looking little queen with jewels all over her dress and a gold crown on her head. "I suppose I frightened you," she said. "That was only a disguise. I have a fine kingdom beyond the North Pole. You must come with me. That's a silly red dress you have. I'll give you silks and satins."

"No, no!" said Christina. "That's a pretty red dress. Mrs. Santa made it. I don't want any other."

The Queen frowned. In fact she looked very angry. "Mrs. Santa, indeed!" she said. "Very well, let me give you this little gold bracelet."

She slipped a little gold band around Christina's wrist. But as she did it the doll disappeared.

"Help, help," cried the fairies, "where is Christina?"

"Way, here I am," said Christina's voice. "But we can't see you," said the fairies. "You never will again," said the queen. "The bracelet made her invisible, and only one person knows how to take it off."

First Church of Christ, Scientist
"In the Universe, Including Man, Evolved by Atomic Force?" was the subject of the lesson-sermon in all churches and societies of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, Dec. 17.

The golden text was from John 1:1-3: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made."

Among the citations which comprised the lesson-sermon was the following from the Bible: "Thus saith the Lord, Keep ye judgment, and do justice for my salvation is near to come, and my righteousness shall be revealed." (Isa. 56:1).

The lesson-sermon also included the following passage from the Christian Science textbook "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "The finite must yield to the infinite. Advancing to a higher plane of action, thought rises from the material sense to the spiritual, from the scholastic to the inspirational, and from the mortal to the immortal. All things are created spiritually. Mind, not matter, is the creator. Love, the divine Principle, is the Father and Mother of the universe, including man."

MEMORIAL TO G. B. W. HADLEY IN LIBRARY

The Edwardian Era, by Andre Maurois, has been placed in Shepard Memorial Library as a memorial to George B. W. Hadley by Charles A. Tucker of Warrenton. The volume is beautifully bound with gilt lettering. It is the story of the men of influence, some strong, some weak, some clever, some stupid, who guided England's destiny over an era of definite change and growth in politics, thought, manners and literature. It is a splendid story of a great king, a great age and an equally great people.

Santa's Work Shop

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER
The Puddle Muddlers had arrived at Santa's workshop. How thrilling it had been dashing over the snow in the sleigh with Santa, with the bells on the reindeer jingling all the way! All around it was very cold and snow was everywhere, while long icicles hung down from the eaves outside Santa's home.

Inside it was very warm, with a great stove in the center of the huge workshop burning cheerily. This was the largest room any of the animals had ever seen, and beyond it was a great long pantry filled with big oranges and rosy apples and nuts, while in another room were boxes and boxes of candy, and candy animals in rows.

"Now," said Santa, "I am going to make some toy pets to look like Mr. and Mrs. Quacker Duck, Top Notch, Rip, the Chickens, and Christopher Columbus Crow."

In no time at all he had finished, and they all quacked and crowed and barked and cawed that the toy pets did look like them at their best.

From time to time the animals slept, but whenever they opened their eyes Santa was always to be seen wide awake, working at his long table.

Now there came a loud barking. Rip picked up his ears. Santa got up from his bench and opened the door. In came a great gust of cold air and an enormous dog.

"This is my dog Great Boy," Santa announced. "Have you many letters for me?"

Great Boy wagged his tail and Santa took off a mail bag that was around his neck. It seemed he was Santa's postman!

Tomorrow—"Santa's Postman."

N. Y. Stock Market

New York, Dec. 19.—(AP)—Dreary dullness burned financial market today as most traders regarded speculative bomb-proof waiting for incentive either for advance or retreat of the domestic gold rate held at yesterday's advance figure of $34.06 an ounce and the dollar rallied in terms of leading foreign exchanges.

Grains, cotton and other commodities were inclined to mark time while bonds were quiet and mild. Trading in the early hours was the lowest in the past week or so.
