HEARING FOR RIVER TO BE HELD APR. 26

Government Engineer to Hear Information Regarding Deepening of Stream.

A public hearing will be held in the Library Building, Greenville, 10:30 A. M. April 26, before Lieutenant Colonel Eugene Reynolds, District Engineer, located at Wilmington, regarding the development of Tar River from Washington, N. C. to Greenville.

The Eastern North Carolina, Inc., through its traffic department, Carolina Shippers Association has gone to a great deal of expense and trouble in compiling tonnage data and other information to be put in the record at this hearing. Practically all of the large shippers and receivers of freight located in this territory have been contacted and the information obtained from them regarding their inbound and outbound tonnage. In addition to putting in a comprehensive record as to tonnage annual savings, etc., the Association will have the support of shippers and receivers of freight and officials of counties and municipalities of the territory.

The Association is asking for a 12 foot channel 75 feet wide from Washington, N. C. to Greenville and according to previous reports of the Army Engineers, this will require one dam and locks below Greenville and will cost approximately $800,000. According to the figures compiled by the Association the immediate direct savings alone, would warrant this expenditure. In fact, the direct savings would approximate $350,000 annually, but this savings, as large as it is, would be insignificant as compared with the advantages that would be brought about by using this waterway as an instrument in getting a general adjustment of our unjust and discriminatory freight rates so as to put the section on an equal basis with Virginia and other northern states, which would enable industry to locate and do business in the territory. If industries are enabled to locate in the section, naturally the payrolls will be increased and every business and professional man in this section would benefit directly. It can readily be seen that this is not a Greenville project but one in which every business and professional man in Eastern North Carolina should take an interest. Therefore, all business and professional men in the section are urged to attend the hearing at Greenville on the 26th.

After his attorneys had entered a plea of second degree murder, Matthew Harrington, 23-year-old Greenville young man, confessed shortly before noon today the self-defense slaying of his stepfather, John Gurganus, here on the night of February 17, and was sentenced to from 25 to 30 years in State's prison by Judge Frank A. Daniels, of Goldsboro, in criminal Superior court.

After his attorneys had entered a plea of second degree murder, Matthew Harrington, 23-year-old Greenville young man, confessed shortly before noon today the self-defense slaying of his stepfather, John Gurganus, here on the night of February 17, and was sentenced to from 25 to 30 years in State's prison by Judge Frank A. Daniels, of Goldsboro, in criminal Superior court.

Taking the witness chair after the State had rested and his plea had been filed, Harrington, graphically told of an automobile ride during which Gurganus attacked him and he was forced to shoot him in self defense. He then related his trip to New York, his return to Washington, and his final surrender to Sheriff Whitehurst here on the night of March 1.

He branded as "a product of his own imagination," the statement made by his friend, Mack Wheaton, Washington gambling club operator, that he had confessed to Wheaton the slaying of his stepfather immediately following his return from New York.

Wheaton, a surprise witness, startled the court room, which had been packed to suffocation during the nearly two and a half days the trial has been in progress, when he testified yesterday afternoon late that Harrington called him to his hotel room the night of his arrival in Washington and told him all about the killing.

Events few thick and fast when court reconvened this morning and the change of the plea from first degree to second degree murder, Harrington's confession and the judge's sentence, brought to a close one of the most sensational cases probably ever heard in the local court room. Harrington admitted that the unexpected testimony presented by Wheaton, played an important part in the change of the plea and his subsequent confession.

Immediately after completion of the case, Judge Daniels adjourned court until Monday morning when the murder-arson charge against Claude Clemmons, Stokes negro is scheduled to be aired.

Hillary Thomas testified to being present at Evans' filling station on Sunday morning when Harrington arrived there. He stated that he asked Harrington to carry him home, which was about two miles from the filling station. Harrington stated that he could not do so, that he was leaving for New York.

Thomas said he left the filling station a short time later. Mr. Nelson, night clerk of the Keys hotel at Washington, testified that early Sunday morning, February 18, that Harrington registered at the hotel under the name of W. F. Cox of Bethel. Again he registered, Nelson said, about 8 o'clock the night of March 1st while he was on duty, this time under the name of Fred Cox, of Bethel. He stated that Harrington, after being assigned to his room, made several telephone calls in an effort to reach Mr. Jesse Harrington, his brother.

CANNON TELLS OF NEW FUND FOR CAMPAIGN

Reports $20,000 Contribution From Frelinghuysen After Going Over Reports

Washington, April 21.—(AP)—After refreshing his memory by overnight perusal of his records, Bishop James Cannon, Jr., testified today to a District of Columbia jury he had received $20,000 from Joseph S. Frelinghuysen, former senator from New Jersey in the 1928 anti-Smith presidential campaign.

The Southern Methodist churchman on trial with Miss Ada Burroughs on charges of conspiracy not to report the contributions he received for use against the presidential candidacy of Alfred E. Smith said yesterday he could recall only $10,000.

A subpoena promptly was sent out for the presence of Frelinghuysen in court on Monday to testify as to what he had given. Answering questions by John J. Wilson, prosecutor, as to the disposition of money collected by Cannon of the Newspaper Supply Company, of Richmond, Va., from 1923 to 1928, the churchman said he thought some of it was put into securities.

"Do you remember," Wilson asked "with whom you dealt in buying securities?" "I think," Cannon replied, "I bought some of them from John Wilson of Richmond."

"Can you tell the jury," Wilson asked, "any particular firm or name of investments in which you put the Howard Money," (R. Howard purchaser of the Richmond property from the Newspaper Supply Co.) "I don't recall these transactions," Cannon said.

Canvass for Library Made Today Under Auspices of Kiwanis Club.

Boy Scouts were scheduled to make a canvass for books for Shepard Memorial Library here today under auspices of the Kiwanis Club. Although the canvass was set for the morning hours no report of how many books were obtained had been received.

The book campaign was inaugurated at a recent meeting of the club at which time numbers of books were contributed by the club members.

It was stated at the time that the children's department of the library was badly in need of new books and if they were not obtained it would be impossible to continue reading clubs during the summer months.

Realizing the seriousness of the situation, the Kiwanians solicited the aid of the Boy Scouts in an effort to provide as many books as possible. All persons appreciating the fine work which the library is doing were asked to give as freely as possible of any books which they might have on hand.

HIGHWAY JOBS FURNISH WORK FOR MEN HERE

Over 230 Laborers to Find Work on Bethel Road and 2 Projects Here.

Although all Emergency Relief projects will remain idle in this county until May 1, it was stated today that approximately 230 men would find work on Public Works Administration projects already started and to be started in the next several days.

Two projects in Greenville and the building of a highway out of Bethel will absorb virtually that many workers, it was stated from the relief headquarters here today.

Work on the improvement of Dickinson Avenue started the first of the week, and while only a small number of men are employed on this project several others will find work on the project calling for the widening of Fifth street from Library street to the city limits.

K. T. Futrell, Emergency Relief director in this county, said this morning that they had been instructed to remain idle until May 1, when it is hoped additional funds will become available to resume work on virtually all projects in the county.

Several swimming pools, community buildings and considerable school work remain to be completed and work will be started on them as soon as the money is made available, Mr. Futrell said.

All relief projects were halted over a month ago, and additional instructions delaying resumption of work until May 1 were received by the local office yesterday from headquarters at Raleigh.

Orders for continuing of work on the community building at Grifton had just been received when the new instructions were received from Raleigh. Only about a day's work remains to be done before the building is completed, it was stated.

Voliva Threatens Gunplay In Revolt

Information has been received from the state office of the Emergency Relief Administration by K. T. Futrell to the effect that none of the projects of the work division will be carried on until further notice. That notice to resume work is not expected to come until about the first of May. Pitt county has had work carried on on one project this week. This was the completion of the community building at Grifton. Twelve men worked a total of 217 hours on this project. The total payroll for this week was $124.50. Under the new ruling however, no more work can be done on this job until about the first of May.

The curtailment of activities results from a shortage of relief funds available for use by this state in the month of April. A considerable part of the original allotment made to North Carolina for this month had to go towards beginning the rural rehabilitation program. It was absolutely imperative that progress be made on this part of the program if any results were to be seen this year. Arrangements had to be made for securing land, arranging for the placing of the relief families on the land, securing fertilizer, seed, mules and all the other items necessary to plant a crop.

The local Pitt county office of the Emergency Relief Administration or ERA, has been working night and day the past two weeks getting all the records of the CWA in order and getting the new records of the ERA set up so that when money is available to carry on the activities of the work division, work may be started immediately on those projects of the old CWA which are going to be finished by the ERA. Approximately 85 per cent of the projects begun under the CWA program and unfinished under that will be completed by the ERA. Mr. Futrell said this morning. It is simply a question of time.

This new ERA program is quite different from the old CWA. Workers on the ERA must be recognized relief cases. Each job will be properly manned, but one man may work ten hours a week on that job while another may work 20 hours on the job. In other words, each man will work only enough time to provide him with the money to meet his actual needs. His time will be computed on the basis of his monthly budgetary needs.

Paris, April 21.—(AP)—Police rule the streets of Paris again today after a night of violence seen by some as setting the stage for outbreaks to come.

Before police and mob guards could quell a raging mob of 1,600 communists and extremists at least 200 persons were injured by clubs, sticks and fists.

Out of the howling mob officers grabbed 940 persons and hauled them off to jails but all were later released.

The mob shouted its defiance around the city hall in a demonstration against a recent decree slashing the pay of civil employees. Today, although pleas were made for an improved system of handling riots, some quarters wondered how long it would be before riots flared again. The disorders were viewed merely as a sort of rehearsal for May day.

FARLEY MAKES DEFENSE FOR MAIL ACTION

Says Cancellation of Air Contracts Resulted From Fraud Of Large Companies

Newark, N. J., April 21.—(AP)—Postmaster General James A. Farley today stoutly defended the cancellation of air mail contracts in a speech delivered at the laying of the cornerstone of the new $6,150,000 post office and federal building.

"The contract cancellations," said Farley, "have been deliberately misconstructed and misrepresented in some quarters and have brought on much public sniping.

"When one goes behind the fog and smoke screen raised by selfish financial and political interests he finds the contracts were connived and executed by collusion and fraud and that millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money were being distributed to selected groups in violation of the plain mandates of the law that such contracts could only be let by competitive bidding," he said.

"Some of the concerns whose contracts were cancelled were owned or affiliated with powerful banking interests and holding manufacturers companies."

"Unconscionable profits had been made and exorbitant salaries and bonuses had been derived from stock promotion based on the fraudulent contracts. The system in vogue was unsound and dishonest and it is my plain duty under the law to end it all and put the air mail system on a sound, honest and legal basis."

The council reached its decision in the absence of most of its group leaders. As a result, many socialist senators, deputies and mayors say they will not comply with the decision.

LEAF INCOME SHOWS GREAT GAIN IN U. S.

Tobacco Growers Receive Hundred Per Cent More For Crop Than Past Year

Washington, April 21.—(AP)—The Farm Adjustment Administration estimated today that the income of American tobacco growers would reach approximately $14,000,000 during the 1933-34 marketing year, an increase of more than 100 per cent over the previous year.

Included in the estimate were benefit payments totalling $28,000,000 made to producers operating under government contract.

Marketing receipts for the season were expected to total $186,000,000 compared with $105,000,000 for the 1932-33 season.

Prices of all types of tobacco averaged about 25 per cent higher this season despite the fact that this year's crop was about 200,000,000—16 per cent above world consumption—when the crop in the 1932-33 season was approximately 200,000,000 below.

High returns for producers were made possible, officials said, because of the prompt action of a large percentage of tobacco growers in contracting to reduce this year's production and through marketing agreements made with domestic tobacco manufacturers. The manufacturers agreed to pay the higher prices to producers.

Growers of fine-cured tobacco received large increases in income for the 1933 crop which brought them $112,000,000. In addition they received $8,600,000 in rental, benefit and price equalization payments.

COMMITTEE OF CABINET IN REPORT

Conclusion of Emergency Secretaries Is Placed on the Desk of the President Today; No Effort made to Decide Whether Codes Have Played Part in the Upward Price Trends.

Washington, April 21.—(AP)—President Roosevelt has been advised directly by a special cabinet committee that creation of a policy on price fixing is not feasible.

This conclusion was laid on the White House desk by Secretaries Perkins, Roper, Wallace and Attorney General Cummings with demands of price-fixing friends and foes that a policy be enacted.

The report was still being held from publication today but was authoritatively described as recommending that positive steps be taken to get information which would make objective judgment possible.

The report is short. It makes no attempt to decide the merits of questions as to whether prices have risen too far under NRA price provisions in codes or whether such provisions have been conducive to monopoly.

Run Over by Truck and Badly Injured

Hildred Smith, the 12-year-old son of Dowdy Smith of Ayden community, was run over by a truck driven by Mack Harrington, on the highway in front of the high school building Wednesday at noon.

A hip was broken and his chest crushed. Doctors could not determine the extent of the injuries immediately. He was taken to Pitt Community hospital for examination and treatment.

Eye-witnesses claim the accident was unavoidable, as the child rushed out from behind another car and did not see the truck approaching.

TWO WHISKEY SELLERS HELD

Colored Man and Woman Jailed here this Morning Following Seizure of Rum.

Two blind tiger operators fell into the toils of the law here this morning and were bound over to the next term of county court in a hearing in police court.

John Atkinson and Addie Brady, both colored, were arrested by city officers with fifteen gallons of contraband whiskey in their possession.

Atkinson was taken into custody at his home on West Fifth street. Ten gallons of whiskey were found, five in the house and the remainder buried underneath the building.

The Brady woman was also "at home" to imbibers of the illicit whiskey, and unwittingly to the officers also. Five gallons of whiskey, police said, were located in the house.

Both were described as old offenders against the prohibition law, the woman especially having been before the court on similar charges.

Farmers Get Benefit Payments. Washington, April 21.—(AP)—North Carolina farmers have been paid $2,861,937.35 in benefit payments for reducing their cotton and wheat crops under the federal Administration Agricultural Adjustment Program. In announcing the figure today, comptroller John B. Payne did not include the hundred of checks to tobacco farmers cooperating in the reduction of tobacco.

When payment totalling $36,400.15 was made a drop in the market in North Carolina and $2,895,537. of the total was paid to cotton farmers. Payment by county included: Beaufort $17,032; Pitt $56,469.09; Wayne $88,895.02; Wilson $63,837.87.

EDITORIAL ANOTHER STEP

(News and Observer) The State has taken over the schools, which once were the local concerns of local governments, and is supporting them by a tax on consumption.

Now it is proposed that the State, which has already taken over the county roads and the county convicts also take over the maintenance of municipal streets in towns of under 2,500 population and give 10 per cent of its gross highway revenues to larger cities for the maintenance of their streets.

Essential as relief of the landowner was when the State assumed the burden of county roads and then the burden of local schools, the trend away from the taxation of property in North Carolina has reached alarming proportions.

Property is wealth and wealth ought to bear the greatest portion of taxation in a democratic State. Relief of property from taxation not only helps the little owner of home and farm, it also permits the escape of great factories, luxurious homes, big power plants and other tangible wealth from bearing a proper share of the costs of government. Relief of property from high taxation in North Carolina has meant the transfer of the tax burden from tangible wealth to the subsistence of the people.

The taxation of subsistence was never a good or just form of taxation. Today it is a more vicious form of taxation that it was even in the past since today we are becoming more than ever aware that purchasing power is the motive power of all business and industry. Taxes on subsistence cannot fail to serve as a drag on buying power and the wealth which escapes taxation by sales taxes is in fact destroying itself by destroying the buying power which creates the value that attaches to all property.

Relief of property from taxation for schools, for roads, for streets, for convicts, for every other activity which formerly was carried on by local governments and now is or may be carried on by the State, may be as essential as the advocates of such relief insist that it is. Nevertheless, North Carolina is embarked upon a dangerous course when, as a matter of permanent policy as well as a matter of emergency, it undertakes to remove more and more the tax burden from the backs of those who possess and place it instead upon the backs of all who buy, no matter how poor or propertyless they may be.

The WORLD of STAMPS

By QUINTON JAMES

Three hundred years ago two groups of islands in the West Indies north of the coast of Venezuela became the Dutch colony of Caracac. Today that fact has been made the prime reason for issuing a commemorative group of 17 stamps.

Pictured thereon are large portraits of the men who played a prominent part in the acquisition of the colony, originally settled by the Spanish in 1499. In addition, on three of the denominations is the sailing ship Johannes van Walbeek. The stamps are similar in design to the William the Silent issue of 1933, with denominations that start at 1 cent and run through 250 gulden. Except for the two higher values, each group of three stamps is identical in the subjects they illustrate.

French Oceania

For the first time since the issue of 1913-15, which in the meanwhile had undergone changes in color, additions, etc., the colony of French Oceania has brought forth a set of new postage stamps.

There are three designs in the group, the seven stamps from 1 to 20 centimes, inclusive, showing a Kanaka fisherman in action. On the five values from 45 to 90 centimes, inclusive, is pictured a Tahitian girl reclining on the beach, while on the

by JEANNE BOWMAN

SYNOPSIS: Judith Lane has returned to Hamilton from the Rio Diablo dam. She is building the dam with Tom Bevin's money, left her for the purpose. And she is in Hamilton to fight the suit content brought by Morton Lampere for divorce. She has stayed out to her old home, Hamilton, early in the morning, and has been somewhat the while with her husband Morton, who, after siding against her with the Bevin's, has disappeared.

JUDITH was delighted to see Cia, but wondered at her early call, since it was barely eight o'clock. Then she was surprised to see Judge Morgan being admitted. Cia kept conversation clipping along at a lively rate until breakfast was over, then accompanied Cunard, Morgan and Judith into Cunard's study.

"We want to discuss the coming contest," explained the Judge. "I don't want you to go to the witness stand unprepared."

"Oh, by the way, what does the case open?"

"This morning, at ten o'clock." "This morning," gasped Judith. "Why didn't you tell me?"

"Didn't want you to develop any nerves waiting for the ordeal. And Miss Judith, it's apt to be that Lampere isn't a pleasant person to have on the opposing side."

"But aren't there things I should know, should do? And why didn't yesterday's newspapers say anything about it, or am I no longer news?"

"You're news," Cia contributed, "but thanks to Canill's desire to murder his wife, the rest of the sheets overlooked the date. We are carrying a story this morning."

"As for you knowing things and doing things," said Judge Morgan, "all you need to do is act natural and you know all that is necessary for you to know."

"About all you'll need to do," offered Cunard, "is hang onto your temper with both hands. And now if you'll dress and tell Mrs. Cunard we're ready, she'll stay with you during the trial as Cia is one of our important witnesses and can't be present until after she's testified."

"And if you think that isn't being a martyr," interposed Cia, "you don't know nothin' no-how. Imagine me, Cia Sanford, sitting in an ante-room when Lampere's in action."

Judith laughed and with her friend went to her room. She asked Delphy to bring a smart street frock she had purchased before leaving town the previous spring.

"Don't you do it, Delphy, bring that outfit I picked out this morning, and bring in those hats I had sent out yesterday." Then to Judith, "Listen, girl friend, look at me, the veteran of a thousand court wars. You've got to look like the forgotten woman and not like a hosiery ad."

Lampere will probably try to make them believe Mathile got that head of platinum hair for nothing. . . turned grey with the shock of her father's death. They'll be feeling sorry for her and they won't be able to feel sorry for you if you appear looking like the five million you're supposed to have."

Cia had been working as she talked and by the time she had finished, with Delphy's assistance, had Judith dressed to her satisfaction.

"Now take a look," she said and spun Judith around to a mirror. THE ensemble Cia had chosen was a dark blue sheer one. Cia had added a vest of white cambric, a turned down collar, and turned back cuffs of the same material.

"I do look efficient," proclaimed Judith, not displeased, for business clothes had been her armor against the world before. Cia wavered between two hats. One drooped, hiding her eyes and giving her a demure, childish look, the other sat trimly on her boyish bob, giving her a business-like air.

"Efficiency wins," decided Cia with a sigh, "and now to war." Driving into town Judith, silent for the most part, asked her friend one question—"How did it happen that you didn't frighten Lampere out of handling the case at all?"

"Couldn't. Didn't dare interfere with the 'pursuance of justice' and he knew it. He also knew that I was the only one who had overheard his talk with Martellian, and it would take real proof to convict either one of anything; proof I wasn't ready to produce."

They reached the courthouse. Judith looked up at the grey stone building. Thought of how many times she had gone with Cia to "sit-in" on a case. It had been interesting, more fascinating than any theater.

Chapter 42 INSINUATIONS

THE quietest at the press table reassaged something important to come. And then Lampere arose. "Gentlemen of the jury, I have been given a most unpleasant task to perform. It is one I studied for some time before I could agree to take it. Gentlemen, in the forthcoming testimony, with which I propose to show you that the will in chancery is not the true will of the man who left it, I will be obliged to assecrete the name of a woman."

"It is a difficult thing for a southern man to do," he paused effectively, then resumed, "and only because there were other women involved, the beloved wife and the grieving daughter of the one who passed away, would I stoop to this. . . this . . . unchivalrous conduct. Looking on them, having known them for years, and seeing their suffering I felt that in the very name of womanhood I would be forced to see that justice was done."

"Your honor," interposed Judge Morgan, easily, "I object to counsel's words. This is an opening statement, not an oratory contest."

Lampere bowed and smiled—"Knowing Judge Morgan's handicap where the use of words are concerned, I concede him his objection."

He turned again to the jury. "Gentlemen, in this forthcoming trial of this will, I am going to show you that this defendant, one Judith Lane-Dale, has, from the moment she first met the late Tom Bevin, attempted to insinuate herself into his favor."

"In the beginning she sought to force her way into his home with the intention of becoming his legally adopted daughter. His wife forestalled that, but she could not keep her from becoming Mr. Bevin's stenographer. In that intimate position she took a more dangerous course. More of that later."

"I shall attempt to prove to you the impractical plans laid for the building of the dam which the defendant says will take all of the money involved. I shall then show you that the aged gentleman was of unsound mind at the time the dam survey was made, and at the time his old will was cancelled and the new one drawn up."

"Gentlemen, I am going to show you that behind all of this was the influence of that little lady who sits there. She who, eye on the millions behind the man for whom she worked, maintained a love-nest where the aged man spent hours of his spare time, a love-nest—"

Judith sat up straight, despite Cunard's tug at her arm. Curiously she didn't feel indignant, she wanted to laugh. Cia should tell them about that, her "attic with an underslung jaw."

"I AM going to prove to you that this new will was drawn up on the night of August 25th, the night, gentlemen of the jury, that this young woman spent alone with the man whose money she hoped to spend at his death."

"Judith Lane-Dale left the office at the time of her marriage, because her husband insisted—"

"Your Honor," interposed Judge Morgan, "if Mr. Lampere wishes to testify, may I suggest he be sworn first?"

"Mr. Lampere, kindly confine your remarks to what you propose to show."

"Certainly, Your Honor," another courtly bow. "I proposed to show that after the young woman had found that she had succeeded in winning the millions through Mr. Bevin's will, she brushed aside all offers of advice from mature minds and plunged heedlessly into a dramatic show of spending it as she pleased."

"I will show you how she deserted her beautiful home, her stalwart life husband. I will show you how she went to the Diablo country and carried on, flying to larder towns carousing with strange men, throwing expensive midnight parties for the men at the dam. I will show—"

There was a commotion in the gallery. Judith turned and looked up as did everyone else. A familiar figure in the colored section was extracting herself from the narrow seat, one arm up-raised, voice a bellying screech.

"Listen here, you Mass' Lamp-sear, don't you go bringin' on none of that raspallion talk." And here a scream, "Let go my arm," and to the "mazed Lampere, "I been with Miss Judy from the moment she left home and there ain't a word a truth in that whole passel o lies . . . let go my arm!" Judith stood up trembling; what would he do to poor old Delphy? "—regive her, please," she said impulsively to Lampere who stood, dark eyes narrowed, "it's just her loyalty; she didn't understand—"

"Your Honor," Lampere ignored her and addressed the Judge, who was demanding in an irascible voice if order were impossible in the court.

"Your Honor, I demand that old woman be arrested and imprisoned for contempt of court."

"The bailiffs have taken care of the disorder. Proceed with your statement."

Judith sat trembling in her chair. She hadn't expected it to be like this. . . Perhaps Cia could help Delphy, blessed old Delphy who had forgotten the color-line when she found her "poor-lamb" being desecrated.

Would Lampere never finish? What if he did call her a gold-digger, what if he did say she was the embodiment of all that is unlovable in woman?

The hands of the clock pointed to five. The Judge looked up as a bell tolled the hour. Lampere saw the look and stopped, sat down.

"Mister Morgan," said the Judge on the bench, "how much time will you speak require?"

"About five minutes," said Morgan easily, and grinned affably. "As counsel says, I'm a little short on words."

"Then proceed please."

MORGAN arose, looked over the top of his spectacles at the men and smiled. "Gentlemen," he confided, "I'm not going to try to prove anything. You have intelligence. You are not going to let your emotions rule your brains. You are business men, and as business men will know the truth when you hear it and when you see it."

"Gentlemen, in the forthcoming trial concerning this will, which I happened to draw up and not on the night of August 25th, I shall tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth speak for itself. Thank you."

The first day was over. Judith walked out of the courthouse, feeling as though she were suspended in midair. At the curb she found Delphy in Cia's car, Cia beside her, both of them laughing so the little couple was wobbling on its springs.

"You found her?" Judith questioned.

"Found her," echoed Cia, derisively, "we thought the court house had been taken over by the Reds, dashed out and discovered it was only Delphy, shaking bailiffs off her arms as though they were beetles."

Judith laughed with them, but she laughed no more that evening. Cunard chided her, Mrs. Cunard consoled her but she only shook her head—"I didn't mind them calling me a gold digger, and that, but to speak of Big Tom that way . . . to talk of his love life. . . why, Mrs. Cunard, the old darling didn't have enough love between those two women to warm him into a smile. No one could have blamed him if he had wandered away from home for just sympathy, but he was too decent."

Mrs. Cunard accompanied her to her room, laughed at Delphy's red brick which went to her mistress' cold feet, smiled at the chocolate and added a sleeping powder.

The Circus Departs By MARY GRAHAM BONNER Bright and early next morning the Puddle Muddlers got up to watch the circus packing to leave. They knew they would miss the gay wagons, the tents, the animals, the excitement. It had certainly been a great thing to have had a visit like this.

It was not long before they were ready to go. Jelly Bear noticed with delight that they had left behind quite a lot of things to eat, and the Signor had given Willy Nilly an enormous bundle filled with all sorts of things he had said they might need some time in the way of blankets and jams and other gifts. Oh, the Signor was very grateful to have been allowed the use of Puddle Muddle all this time.

As they went down through Puddle Muddle one of the wagons almost upset in a muddy patch but it was righted quickly so there was no accident.

And as they got to the outskirts of Puddle Muddle with Rip and Christopher and the bears and the ducks and Top Notch and Willy Nilly following they shouted "Good-bye" again and again.

At last they were beyond the bend in the road, and Rip followed along for a little while and Christopher flew overhead.

But then they came back and the Puddle Muddlers sat around and talked about the circus.

"We've had a wonderful time," said Willy Nilly, "but certainly I must get at my chores now. Things have been neglected, but it won't be long before I get at them. Nothing will stop me. Only the circus was certainly worth any time we spent!"

And they all agreed.

WALKING GRACEFULLY (By Laura Townsend Davies)

Have you ever observed how very few of us walk gracefully? Pick out a seam in a rug or a line on your floor. Now your foot is in the correct position for walking and standing.

MEMORIAL

Rev. W. S. Harden 1874-1933

Rev. William Sumner Harden departed this life on December 9th, 1933, while in his eleventh year as pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Greenville, after a brief illness.

Mr. Harden was born in Walhalla, Ga., the son of John Le Conte Harden and Annie Way Harden. He was educated at the University of South Carolina and at Columbia Theological Seminary, and was ordained to the Gospel Ministry in the Presbyterian Church by Savannah Presbytery in April, 1906.

His early ministry was spent in Douglas, Ga. (1906-08); Fitzgerald, Ga. (1908-10); Colquhoun, Ga. (1910-14); Statesboro, Ga. (1914-16); and Columbia, S. C. (1916-23) prior to coming to Greenville. He was received by this Presbytery in April, 1923 and was at the time of his death our Stated Clerk.

After his early ministry in Georgia, Mr. Harden accepted a call to be assistant pastor to the late Dr. Geo. Blackburn of Arsenal Hill Presbyterian Church, Columbia. During this time the Shandon Presbyterian Church was organized with fifty-three members and Mr. Harden served first as Stated Supply and then as installed pastor of this congregation for six years.

Under his ministry the church grew in membership from the original fifty-three to three hundred. A brick Sunday school building and manse were built. Congregational Presbytery elected him as Stated Clerk and chairman of their committee on Christian Education and Ministerial Relief, which positions he held at the time of his removal to Greenville, N. C.

Mr. Harden spent over one-third of his ministerial life in Greenville, taking the pastorate there and leading the people in the erection of a $40,000 church plant. He also was active in the entire religious life of the town, being for the last three years of his life, president of the local Ministerial Union, the members of which conducted his funeral from the Greenville church.

In Greenville, Mr. Harden worked incessantly for the benefit of the Presbyterian students at East Carolina Teachers' College. He was two days. Death resulted from an attack of the heart which he suffered on the 7th, followed by pneumonia which developed the next day. His funeral was conducted on Sunday, December 10, at 3:00 p. m. by the Greenville Ministerial Union, with Rev. J. T. Wildman representing Albemarle Presbytery. The body was interred on Monday afternoon at Griffin, Ga.

Albemarle Presbytery pays tribute to the memory of a faithful Presbyter, a loyal defender of the faith and an aggressive preacher of righteousness. We miss his guiding hand, his inspiring presence and the warmth of his friendship.

We would apply ourselves to the ideals that inspired him and in the memory of his ministry strive to make ours more like the pattern of his Lord, in whose presence he is now living the more abundant life. Respectfully submitted, B. W. MOSELEY, Greenville, N. C.

BELVOIR NEWS

The Juniors and Seniors of the Belvoir school held their first banquet on April 17 at the Friendly Dining Room in Greenville. The table was very attractively decorated carrying out the color scheme of red and white. Red favors and red mini cups on a table cloth of white and red and white bows on the backs of the chairs was very effective.

Mr. Lewis, the superintendent, gave the invocation, after which everyone was invited by the toastmistress, Miss Delphia Parker, to be seated and enjoy the evening. A short speech of welcome was given by Alden Harris. Then followed toasts given by Gerlie Lee Mayo, Julia Johnson and Mavis Parker. Responses were made by John Ashley Bullock of the Senior class, Mr. Frank Wildman, of the faculty, and Mr. Brown Mayo, of the guests. A fifteen minutes entertainment rendered by Mr. Ed Hearne of Greenville and New York, tap dancing by Frances Spilman and Myra Blount, also of Greenville, contests of various kinds and music, made up the evening's entertainment.

Guests at the banquet included people from Fountain, Falkland, Conctoe, Arthur and Greenville.

"Rodman asked me what I knew about it and I replied I didn't want to convict the boy and I would be willing to pull some time for him before I'd tell it wasn't too much time."

"Boy, I admire your spunk!" Rodman was said to have replied.

Replying to solicitor's question as to whether he had told anyone else of the confession, Wheaton stated that he had told his brother and J. R. Potter.

Following Wheaton's cross-examination his brother and J. R. Potter took the stand in corroboration of Wheaton's testimony.

This morning the state presented its two final witnesses Mrs. Albritton and Mrs. Hodges of Beaufort county, who substantiated testimony previously presented that Harrington and Gurganus visited them Saturday, February 17.

Following this testimony the state rested and the defense tendered a plea of guilty of second degree murder which was accepted by the state.

The defendant Harrington, then took the stand where for two hours he told his story and underwent cross-examination.

He stated that when he returned to Greenville from New York he had decided to take over the operation of some farm land near Aiden, that it had been his intention to be married at an early date and to come here and settle down.

He said shortly after borrowing Proctor's car on the morning of February 17 he met his stepfather, John Gurganus, on the street, called him to the car and together they went down to inspect the farm land in question.

He said it was his intention to have Gurganus aid him in the operation of the farm and that they discussed and agreed upon that morning. Then he told of his visits in the Washington section which corresponded with the testimony already presented by the state.

He said that when he and Gurganus left the Washington section on the Saturday night of the killing they decided to purchase some whiskey at a point near Washington on the old Pactolus road and that after purchasing and drinking some whiskey they proceeded to Greenville by the way of Pactolus.

He stated that when they arrived in Greenville Gurganus was too drunk to get out of the car so he rode him around for some time to sober him up. These drives covered a portion of the Winter-ville highway, Cox Mill highway and a trip to Green Wreath Park on the Falkland road and another trip across the river.

He stated that at this time Gurganus had sobered up enough to talk and that he, Harrington, in the course of conversation referred again to his intention of marrying the young lady from New York about five years ago.

He said that Gurganus urged him not to marry her or any other girl because they were all alike and all would cheat. Surring references to members of the family and acquaintances in regard to Gurganus' opinion of women led to a heated argument in which Harrington struck Gurganus in the face as they were driving along the highway.

He immediately stopped the car and a fight followed in which he said Gurganus pulled him from the car. He stated that after struggling with Gurganus alongside the car, he reached back in the car to try to get something to defend himself with.

He said that Gurganus seized him by the throat and pinned him to the car seat of the car and was checking him with one hand while he drew his gun with the other.

He declared he got the gun away from Gurganus and that Gurganus was choking him and had his face close to his own. He placed the gun in Gurganus' face and fired three times in order to protect himself.

Gurganus fell limp upon him, he said, then he raised him up, placed him in the car seat, turned the car around and drove back to Greenville during which time he tried to decide whether or not it was advisable to give himself up. Realizing there was doubt in his story being believed by officers, he continued on through town and drove out upon one of the other highways in connection with the crime and that his sole reason for sending for him, Wheaton, was to get information as to what it was all about.

He told of Wheaton calling his brother, of his brother's arrival at the hotel and of Wheaton's insistence to his brother that they have him plea insanity.

He declared that at no time did he make a confession of any nature to Wheaton and branded Wheaton's testimony as something made up from his own mind.

He stated that he told his brother that it was and had been his intention to come on back to Greenville and give himself up and tell the whole story and his brother called his personal friend, Sheriff William Rumley and asked him to bring Wheaton to Greenville to Sheriff Whitehurst.

When asked by Prosecutor Gaylord why he plead not guilty when arraigned in court if it had been his intention all along to give up and tell the whole story, he admitted that he had been advised to do so because there was nothing but circumstantial evidence against him and he had hoped to get out of it. The cross-examination resulted in admission of the circumstances brought about by the unlooked-for testimony yesterday of Mack Wheaton prompted the change in plea.

Immediately following Harrington the defense presented four or five character witnesses after which they rested their case at 12:08 p. m. Immediately Judge Frank Daniels passed sentence of 25 to 30 years in the state penitentiary.
