GASTON STARTS "BIG PUSH" AGAINST STRIKE HOLD

Tobacco Averages $31.23 A Hundred On Local Market

Best Average Of The Season Set On Monday

NEARLY HALF MILLION PAID TO FARMERS

Average Nearly Three Cents Higher Than Last Friday When Largest Sale of Season Was Handled; Next to Largest Sale Handled Yesterday; Much Tobacco Here Today But Market Plans To Clear During Afternoon

Tobacco prices soared to the highest ground in years on the Greenville tobacco market yesterday and the best price average of the season was established. It was revealed in the report of sales by K. W. Cobb, supervisor of sales. Mr. Cobb said the market yesterday sold a total of 1,357,078 pounds of tobacco of which the farmers were paid $423,926.36 at an average of $31.23 per hundred pounds. The average was nearly three cents higher per pound than last Friday when the highest average up to that period was hung up. The high figure was established on one of the heaviest sales of the season although not quite as heavy as Friday when the largest sale of the season was recorded.

There was a considerable quantity of bright leaf on the floors of the various warehouses today in spite of threatening weather, but floors are expected to be cleared up by late afternoon to make way for continued heavy offerings tomorrow. The price situation has brought joy to the hearts of the farmers all season, but the continued rise started last week increased the happiness of growers who are beginning to see their way out of the hole into which they fell during the four years of depression and accompanying low prices. Many piles of tobacco sold as high as $50 a hundred on the local market yesterday. The major part of the offerings consisted largely of tips with a considerable amount of common grades still in evidence. Farmers have been appealed to by tobaccoists to use more care in the grading of their tobacco, declaring that tobacco graded and devoid of strings and foreign matter would bring much higher prices than that not receiving such attention. The average established yesterday was described as the highest since 1919 when prices were at their peak and farmers received more money for their tobacco than they ever received before.

It was announced today that Rev. Worth Wicker, of Beaufort has been extended a call by St. Paul's Episcopal church here. CLAIM GORMAN OWES $2,000 GROCERY BILL

Danville, Va., Sept. 18.—Francis J. Gorman, chairman of the National textile strike committee, will be attached for non-payment of $2,000 grocery bills, a holdover from a previous strike, if he comes here, local grocers declared today. In a telegram to General Hugh S. Johnson, commending his attitude toward the strike, Mahon and Tyree, grocers, criticized Gorman and revealed the fact the food bill was unpaid. According to the message, Gorman purchased the food supplies here for a strike commissary in 1930.

PUSH CLAIMS FOR LOCATION OF BIG PARK

North Carolina and Tennessee Engage in Discussion at Capital City

Washington, Sept. 18.—(AP)—The neighboring states of North Carolina and Tennessee today carried their fight over the southern location of the Shenandoah-Great Smoky national parkway to Secretary Ickes, the final authority in the matter unless an appeal is taken to President Roosevelt. A special train brought approximately 200 prominent Tar Heels to the Capital and Tennessee was represented by the Interior Secretary. Each state will have an hour and a half to present its argument. The parkway location has been determined from where it leaves the Shenandoah national park in Virginia to Blowing Rock, N. C. But from there to the Great Smoky Mountain national park, divided almost equally between North Carolina and Tennessee, the route is in dispute. The argument hinges principally on the parkway entrance to the Great Smoky Mountain park North Carolina wanting it on the Tar Heel side and Tennessee on the Tennessee side. Heading the North Carolina delegation were Governor Ehringhaus and Senators Bailey and Reynolds and several of the state's congressmen. Governor Hill McAllester and Senators McKeller and Bachlan, led the Tennessee contingent. Highway officials from both states were also present.

ARTILLERYMEN TO DRILL HERE

Local Military Unit To Drill Two Nights While Awaiting Strike Duty

The local artillery unit of North Carolina National Guardsmen was marking time today, ready at a moment's notice to respond to orders for duty in the textile strike zone. Captain Herbert Waldrop was notified by Adj. General J. Van Metts several days ago to hold his men in readiness for strike duty and all members of the unit had been told to govern themselves accordingly. Captain Waldrop said two drills would be held at the armory tonight and tomorrow night at 8 o'clock to get the men in better trim for strike duty. It was understood that rifles were to be furnished artillerymen on strike duty, augmenting the pistols which they carry in their belts at all times. Other units in this part of the state have been ordered to hold themselves in readiness for strike duty and should the local soldiers be called out it was probable other forces also would be called into action. Several days ago it was thought some trouble might develop at the local mill as result of flying squadrons reported on the way here, but the strikers never appeared and the mill has operated without slightest interruption. The plant here is not under attack and in view of the fact the operatives have expressed a desire to work every protection will be thrown about them in case of invasion by strike squadrons.

N. Y. Tobacco Exchange Will Open Wednesday

New York, Sept. 18.—(AP)—The long awaited opening of the New York tobacco exchange tomorrow will be marked by the first organized dealing in future contracts in America's third largest cash crop. Tobacco, with 300 years of history, never before has had a recognized market place where manufacturers, shippers, packers, bankers and merchants could buy and sell their commodity and avail themselves of the insurance offered by hedging facilities. For the time being the type of tobacco known under the government classification of type 12, grade B4F will be the basis grades dealt in. Nine types of a number of grades will be deliverable under specific differentials. One future contract will consist of 10,000 pounds of redried leaf packed in hogheads. The minimum price fluctuation will be five one hundredth of a cent a pound or $5 a contract while the trade limit of 2 cents a pound for the previous session closing price will prevail. Two delivery points have been established, Norfolk or Newport News and Louisville, Ky. In addition to hedging facilities the New York exchange hopes to assist in the orderly marketing of the crop through dissemination of grade information and by supplying a continuous barometer of values.

INQUIRY HEARS U. S. WARNING ON 'AIRCRAFT'

Munitions Committee Told Germany Using Impounded Foreign Funds in Subsidy

Washington, Sept. 18.—(AP)—A report that Germany was using impounded foreign funds to subsidize German aircraft manufacturers was read today in the Senate Munition committee. Washington, Sept. 8.—(AP)—A tacit warning by the United States government against violation of the Versailles treaty in the sale of aircraft equipment to Germany received the attention of the Senatorial Munitions Inquiry today. The State Department investigators heard of the move to prevent any circumvention by American concerns of the treaty provisions designed to restrict re-arming of the Reich. The department circulated to all American aircraft companies doing foreign business a definition of the treaty provisions. This was interpreted as an attempt to prevent violation of the world war peace pact to which the United States is not a signatory.

COUNTY COURT FACES HEAVY DOCKET TODAY

Forty or Fifty Cases To Be Considered During Two Day Session Here

County court got down to work today with a docket probably as heavy as any in several past months. Records in the office of the clerk of court this morning indicated that between forty and fifty cases had been docketed for the session expected to continue through today and a greater part tomorrow. The cases consisted mainly of charges of violation of traffic and prohibition laws and while a number of the defendants are expected to be released on payment of fines several probably will find their way to the roads. The slot machine situation was expected to be taken up by the court during its concluding session tomorrow. It was understood that three or four slot machine operators and owners have been summoned to appear before the county court in "test cases" and Judge James is expected to define what he considers as gambling devices and order them to cease operation permanently. The jurist several days ago ordered illegal slot machines closed down by September 12, and instructed officers to arrest operators and seize their machines if they were caught operating after that time. The fight to retain the machines in hundreds of places throughout the county is expected to be one of the most vigorous in years, but Judge James is determined to put an end to gambling and is expected to bring all pressure possible to bear in the battle. The court ordered resulted from recommendations of the six months grand jury that County court take adequate action to do away with legalized gambling in all sections of the county. The recommendation, it was said, came after complaints registered to the jury by citizens in various communities. It was said that children in many instances were allowed to play the machines and other devices and parents appealed to the jurors that immediate action be taken to relieve the various communities of the gambling devices. PICKETS HELD BACK AS MILLS BEGIN HUMMING

Most Mills, However, Announced They Will Attempt to Operate Only on Curtailed Schedule Until Strike is Cleared up; Only One Closedown Reported at Rockhill, S. C.; Concord Mill Resumes Work

Charlotte, Sept. 18.—(AP)—Gaston county, North Carolina's largest textile center, began its "big push" today against the tight hold the general textile strike has held on the area for eighteen days. Nine plants reopened this morning with an estimated 1,200 persons on the job, bringing the total of operating plants to 15 of the county's 104. The number of persons at work jumped to approximately 3,300 persons with 22,800 still idle. National guardsmen, heavily equipped with machine guns and tear gas, patrolled the area at opening time and held back pickets from mills but no disorders developed. The mills reopening all small are the Parkdale, Gastonia, Waking Co., Princeton, Ragan Thread, Inc., all at Gastonia and Dorothy at Dallas, Marroweb at Dallas, Belmont Hosiery at Belmont and the Osage at Bessemer City. Most of them announced they would attempt to present to operate with only one shift. Many other mills which have reopened in the past few days continued to operate with reduced forces. At High Point, big hosiery center, a survey showed all 29 plants running but with only 3,925 out of 6,395 employes at work. The first closedown of the week was reported from Rockhill, S. C., where the Jac-Felburg Hosiery Mill employing approximately 150, was forced to close by heavy picketing. The Buffalo mill at Concord, normally employing 100, reopened today with between 40 and 50 on the job. There were no disorders.

SLOT DEVICES CLOSE AFTER COURT ORDER

Police Report Only Small Pool Tables in Operation in City at Present

With slot machine test cases scheduled to come up for consideration in County court tomorrow, police reported today that not a single arrest had been made in Greenville since issuance of the court order calling for the closing of illegal gambling devices throughout the country. George Clark, chief of police, said this morning that his men had been unable to find a single slot machine in operation since the court order became effective September 12, although he did say that a few of the miniature pool tables were continuing to run. County officers were reported to have seized four or five machines in various parts of the county around which "test cases" have been built and these will be considered by Judge Dink James in County court tomorrow. The jurist will determine the legality of the machines brought to him by the officers and is expected to issue a far reaching order after these cases have been given due attention. Chief Clark said his men had informed slot machine operators of the court order prior to September 12, and had again visited such places to see if the order was being observed. He said this morning as far as they had been able to determine the operation had been suspended pending decision of the court in the "test cases" and operators and the public generally were watching the court to see what would be the final outcome of the fight to do away with what previously has been described as legalized gambling.

Following his address here Thomas was to go to High Point where he speaks this afternoon. He will make a third speech tonight at eight o'clock in High Point.

VAST CAVERN OF LAKES TEXAS TOWN 'BOOM'

Rocksprings, Tex.—(AP)—An immense cavern, worming its way for miles underground, is bringing tourist money to this town. The "Devil's Sinkhole," described by Dr. Frank E. It contains numerous lakes, clear as glass and cold as glacier water. Dr. Nicholson said, and a hill 600 feet high and a mile in circumference. Miles of underground passages, corridors and canyons have been explored by Dr. Nicholson's party, but many more remain to be investigated he said.

Later the troops were forced to fire over the heads of a small group of demonstrators to make them retreat. TIGER ISLAND
A New Serial by Gouverneur Morris

Chapter 20
HUNGER SERENADE

THE wild pigs, however, were soon exterminated and so also the deer, and the antelope which had swum ashore from the Boldero. The monkeys were watchful and astute. They also, when they came down out of the trees to drink, posted sentinels and were not to be caught.

To Ivy, the varied sounds which a tiger makes were a language, and the sounds in the night told her a story of gnawing hunger and bitter discontent. She acknowledged to herself that it had been idiotic not to leave the beasts in their cages to drown.

The time came when she and Bowers no longer felt free to roam the island at will. Food, of course, had to be sought and gathered, or caught and fetched, but they began to foresee a time when they might have to stand a regular siege in their cliff dwelling.

One dusk the tigers appeared suddenly in the opening below the front porch and complained that they were hungry and demanded that something be done about it. During the night they remained in the vicinity and while their nearness was not an immediate threat it was disquieting and presaged worse things to come. When dawn broke the tigers were still in the neighborhood and Bowers remarked:

"It's lucky for us that they hunt in pairs because whenever they are in the front valley as they are now it is perfectly safe for us to potter around in the back valley."

"It's all my fault," said Ivy, "and it makes me sick to think what a fool I was."

"I was a fool too," said Bowers. "I'm stronger than you, and I ought to have used force to keep you from opening that cage and letting them out so free. If I'd had the rifle and had killed them, would you be accusing me now of breaking a promise?"

Ivy shook her head. "I am beginning to understand lots of things," she said, "that I never understood before. I would kill them myself if I could."

Even if it had not been for the threat of the tigers, it would have occurred to them to make experiments in food storage. Bananas, they discovered, if sliced sufficiently thin could be so dried in the sun that they would remain edible and sustaining, if not very appetizing, for a long time. Guavas and mangoes could also be dried after a fashion but the guavas even when freshly gathered were barely edible. They however, made a store of such things and of course ripe coconuts. They had most of the canned things from the Boldero and also fish which they had dried in the sun, but after a few days this began to smell so unpleasantly that they got rid of it.

"If it weren't for those damned cats," Bowers said more than once, "we could turn our back valley into a regular garden!"

AND more and more he brooded over his enforced idleness and his helplessness. It was bad enough to be pitted against the ordinary conditions of a tropic island, but these conditions could have been infinitely bettered by careful planning and hard work.

He was a strong man with a good average brain, and a definite gift for mechanics, and yet he saw himself continually frustrated and worried by two creatures who excelled him only in strength and in the weapons which were a part of them.

If he could not devise some means by which he could get the better of them, he would not be able to look himself in the face.

He became absent-minded, and Ivy almost thought at times that his love for her was cooling. This was not the case. He was ashamed because the woman he loved saw his helplessness, and he was cudgeling his wits to devise some means by which a naked man may be the death of two naked tigers.

He had an ax still in good condition but this, opposed to the claws' strength and the swift overpowering weight of a tiger's charge, could not rightly be considered a weapon. He had in addition an oversized pocket-knife and fire. With fire he could turn a tiger and even control it to a certain extent, but he could not hope to kill it. On the other hand, couldn't he? Wasn't fire the answer?

On the following day the tigers made their presence known in the back valley, but there was no wind and the sky was overcast. Bowers cursed himself for having been so slow to think of fire as a weapon. That overcast sky could mean but one thing, the ruination of their plans. It was making up to rain.

But it did not rain that day or that night. Dawn came over the volcano a gray watery-looking dawn, and from the opposite direction came wind in strong gusts. The surf rose higher and higher along the barrier reef and whitecaps scudded shoreward across the lagoon, also clouds darkly gray scudded across the sky.

The tigers had greeted the change of weather and the drop in temperature with a series of short coughing barks. They were restless, uneasy and very hungry. The time for action had come.

Ivy and Bowers made their way to the beach well loaded with the makings of many fires. Helen, belted and chained, was left behind in the cave. They hurried as fast as they could. Both had a feeling that there was a great race on between fire and rain.

When Bowers had reached the farther shoulder of the back valley he signaled to Ivy, as prearranged, by raising his arms straight above his head. No more than a quarter-mile of beach separated them. Ivy, who had already laid her fire, went down on her knees. He thought that he saw the flash of the match which she had struck. Then he lighted his fire.

When they came together at the mouth of the little river and looked up the valley they looked into a furiously receding furnace of fire and smoke. Above the crackling of the roar of the conflagration which they had started could be heard the far-off roaring of the tigers, at once defiant and apprehensive.

Just when Bowers was certain that the great race between fire and rain had been won by the former, the first drops fell, and these were followed a few moments later by a deluge. In five minutes the slow meandering little river was a rushing torrent and had overflowed its banks.

The flames of the roaring conflagration, fifteen to twenty feet high, were flattened to the earth and quenched. The lower regions of the valley had been burned black, but the narrow at the head to which the tigers had retreated were untouched.

"Well," said Bowers, "that's that." They went home to their cave, wondering what they had better try next.

What they tried next was a sample of weather. All day and all night the rain fell without abatement. The cooking-fire which hitherto had been kindled on the ledge in front of the cave had to be brought inside and put out as soon as it had served its purpose. They were sticky damp, and their eyes smarted.

During the morning of the fourth day the sky cleared, and they looked out upon a world as clean and sharply bright as a cut jewel. But they were still provisioned and did not leave the cave.

Tomorrow, Bowers makes a gun.

With the large amount of money being paid daily for tobacco here the farmers of this section this fall will be in the best shape financially for several years which means that they will have plenty of money to spend. The merchant who wants his part of this increased business will see to it that his sales message will go into the homes of these farmers. There is no better medium through which to reach these buyers than through the columns of your newspaper.

A short while ago there was a petition for the re-surfacing of Evans street in the business section being circulated among the property holders but so far we have heard nothing further of the project. The re-surfacing of his street would not only improve the street for use but would protect the investment we already have in the brick pavement. There are at this time several bad places in the pavement and unless the street is re-surfaced now it will not be long before the present pavement deteriorates to the extent that the street will have to be re-paved.

Reviews Of Strategy
No party can laugh off such results unconcernedly. Nor are the republican regulars doing so. Their countenances are grim. Smiles that were all set to break out when republican Maine went republican have soured.

The leaders will take counsel in their own way. The situation would seem to preface a serious review of strategy so far to seek a strengthening. Pronouncements of both parties from now on will be studied the more closely for indication of new tactics.

An Intense Campaign
The first straws in the wind are

Farley Is Active
On the "new deal" side, the natural thing to say is, being said enthusiastically. It will be heard often, in the words of Chairman Farley, the Maine decision proves "the majority of people" are with Roosevelt.

He knows the people like a winner. He also knows they like a scrap per who carries the fight to the other fellow. And he still is a gift believer in correspondence.

These are three of the bases on which he is conducting his particular part in the "new deal" cause. What Maine did, he reiterates, shows Roosevelt winning. His speeches bristle with denunciation of "standpatters". Talk in Washington has it that 50,000 letters went from democratic headquarters into Maine during the two weeks before the vote. The postage bill will be higher by November.

"You can't sign the paper! You won't sell the cubs!" shouted the surprised men. "They'll be known all over the world. You're out of your mind."

"Maybe I am," said Willy Nilly, "and maybe I'm not. We don't care whether they're known over the world or not. They're known here and that is enough for us and for them."

"Well, of all the crazy ones," said the first man. "He has ears like a goat," he added in a lower voice to his companion. "That probably is the reason he hasn't any more sense."

Poor Willy Nilly heard the remark. He thought of his ears which he never had been fixed. When would he ever be able to give them any attention? But what did it matter? Oh yes, he wanted to fix them and make them less pointed and have them stay back instead of sticking out. He would attend to them later. The cubs were much more important.

"Don't you dare speak about his ears, caw, caw," said Christopher. "His ears are O. K.," growled Jelly Bear.

"They're beautiful," growled Honey Bear.

"Quack, quack, they are lovely," quacked Mr. and Mrs. Quacko.

"They're fine ears," barked Rip. "I should say they were!" cackled Top Notch.

The men could not understand what the Puddle Muddlers were saying, but they decided they had better be off. Willy Nilly was queer and they could do nothing about it. What a silly little man to make such a fuss about a couple of bear cubs! Let the cubs stay home!

not unlike those after the last Maine tally. President Hoover at that time telegraphed Chicago headquarters of a "need for renewed and stronger effort that the people may fully understand the issues at stake."

Now Chairman Fletcher says "the people have not yet understood. . . . We intend to redouble our efforts all along the line."

And Senator Hastings predicts dire results "unless the American people can be made to see the dangers that confront them."

Thus, the only clear prospect today is for an even intenser campaigning of the familiar pattern. One possibility that could change it would be for more pronounced party cleavage, with greater numbers of life-long democrats entering the republican list and vice versa.

Their Surprise
By MARY GRAHAM BONNER
The two men who had come to Puddle Muddle to ask the little man, Willy Nilly, to sell the cubs Blacky and Jupiter were pleased.

They were quite certain that Willy Nilly had decided to let the cubs go.

"We knew you'd agree," the first man said. "Your little cubs here will bring fame to the settlement of Puddle Muddle by acting in the movies."

"Now you'll just sign your name to the paper we've brought, and we'll take the cubs along right away with us."

"They'll be wonderfully treated. Every one will like pets of them, and you'll be rich. Yes, we've offered you, as you can see by the paper, plenty of money now and we're going to send you extra money later on as they act in other pictures."

"We're rich now!" cried Willy Nilly.

"Of course you are!" exclaimed the second man. "We're going to pay you at once."

"We're rich without the money!" Willy Nilly said. The men looked surprised.

"He heard you were not very well off—that you had to work hard to make things grow and that you had to gather a good deal of your food in the woods such as nuts and berries and so forth," said one.

"And that you had very little real money," said the second.

"We're rich!" Willy Nilly repeated. "We have each other. We all care so much for one another. I'm very sorry but I cannot sign your paper!" The surprise of the two men was startling.

Tennessee Mill Hands Lead Prayer Meetings
Lebanon, Tenn.—(AP)—Some mill workers in the south may be proficient at leading strikes, out in the Lebanon Woolen Mills here they are able to lead a prayer meeting.

The factory is an open shop on unions but a closed shop on religion, especially as regards the "Leadership Group" made up of officials and office workers. In this connection, an advertisement for a stenographer for the mill specified "none but active Christians need apply."

The Lebanon Mills have carried on amid strikes with two prayer meetings a day, six days a week. The meetings have been held since 1916.

"I decided then," says John E. Edgerton, president of the mills, "that if religion is a good thing on Sunday, it's a good thing on Monday and every other day in the week and there's no reason why it shouldn't be mixed up with business."

In a general meeting of workers he put to a vote the question of continuing the daily services and the "eyes" were unanimous.

Before days were split into two shifts only one such service was held each day. The present system was held each day, six days a week, at 6 a. m. and 2 p. m., just before each set of employees goes to the machines.

Edgerton, a past president of the National Association of Manufacturers in the United States, president of the Tennessee Manufacturers Association and a Methodist Church leader, said "the whole atmosphere of the mill changed" during the meetings of 18 years ago.

"There was cordiality and friendliness and better spirit," he said. "Our production began to increase. But most important of all, the people were happier."

POLITICS at random

By BYRON PRICE
Washington — Orthodox republicans had a lesson in Maine two days ago like the one in the elections just over. It was that their campaign was missing fire, they had better get busy or take the consequences.

It was two months before the Roosevelt avalanche. They got busier very enough, ad recaptured rocky Maine for Hoover; but nevertheless 43 of the other 47 states. Now Maine is definitely out, so far strengthening their cause in November is concerned.

RYAN SPEAKS AT ROTE CLUB

Christian Minister Says World Must Develop New Technique of Living

By WYATT BROWN

"We have got to get the idea that we are a world hopelessly bound together and work for the good of the whole group," said Reverend Billy Ryan last night in his remarks before the Rotary club at its regular weekly meeting on Rotary Avenue last night. "We have got to develop a new technique of living. We have had individualistic living, group and section living. We have got to adopt what I call collectivistic technique."

Reverend Ryan impressed his hearers with what a queer crazy world the contemporary scene presents to people today. In a world of increasing intelligence higher I. Q.'s, increased educational facilities, more young college graduates, and hundreds of thousands of adults going to school there ought to be better organized existence in the opinion of Rev. Ryan but instead he reports that he finds a more topsy-turvy, crazy sort of world than ever.

"One cannot turn around without depending on someone else. Yet we live in this world as though each were an independent self-sustaining unit. Interdependence is the keynote of our civilization and yet we go along trying to be independent of each other. We ignore interdependence," he said.

When a few years ago textile workers were crying for work and were willing to put in any number of hours for any kind of wage just to have employment, today they are privileged to work and choose to strike for minimum hours and maximum pay. In their blindness they want to exercise their inalienable right to strike and fail to regard other men's rights to work.

"One would never have thought a young arch-duke's death could threaten the peace of the world. It did cause the World War. People do not care what kind of government Austria has. A young Arch-Duke aspires to return to Austria and reinstate the Hapsburg dynasty. Small neighboring nations object and are backed by France. If the young Duke marries a certain girl, the reinstatement will take place and war hinges on its occurrence. We go blissfully on our way oblivious of all world's problems."

Rev. Ryan said he could not see how any sanity can get into this crazy world we live in which has thousands on ole and relief because we over-produced until groups like the Rotary begin thinking about these problems and try to discover in what way people are interdependent and work for a common good.

"I have been saying this for twenty years but no one seems to be hearing it. Can you please think in provincial terms, even Rotary must do its work with the world before it. If doctors, lawyers and preachers cannot bring sanity in their work, I do not know where sanity is coming from," he said in closing.

Before Rev. Ryan's address the club had a musical treat provided by Miss Beulah Brown and Mrs. Charles White in solos and a duet accompanied by Miss Eva Hodges on the piano. Mrs. White sang Green's "I Love You" and Miss Brown sang "Any Little Song of Mine."

Two blind wandering ministers provided a unique addition to the program by singing two popular songs to the accompaniment of the guitar of one, Charles E. Ward of Roanoke, Virginia was a guest of the club besides the artists and speaker of the evening. Charles Horne was in charge of the program and Dr. Charles Adams, vice president of the club presided.

Jasper Winslow and Claude Gaskins were appointed as the Rotary committee to cooperate with the other civic organizations of Greenville to assist with plans for a group power line in Eastern Carolina. The plan is to have further discussion next week in a meeting of the mayors of neighboring towns in Greenville next week.

Pendergraft Made Guard With Heels

Chapel Hill, Sept. 18.—Paul Pendergraft, scrappy center on last year's freshman eleven has been shifted to guard and is being groomed as first understudy to George Barclay, Carolina's captain.

The local youngster's promotion which came as the result of his continued good work in drills and scrimmages, puts Pendergraft ahead at least of the present, of the letterman, Jim Stephens, and the sophomore, Charles McIver.

It also means that Pendergraft will have a much better chance to play some ball this fall. The Tar Heels have three good prospects at center in "Babe" Daniel, Ralph Gardner, and Murray Kanner, but the reserve guard material is scant. Daniel and Gardner are lettermen Kanner is remembered as a star on the freshman eleven of 1932, but was out of college last fall, and hasn't had a good chance to show his wares yet, having been slowed up by a charley-horse.

If Gardner and Kanner, who are tall, rangy boys and weigh in the neighborhood of 180 pounds, come through, there is a possibility that Coach Snively might use the hefty Daniel some at his former tackle post.

The veterans, Tatem and Evins and the sophomore, Timpey, have been doing some good work at the latter position, but here again the Tar Heels are short on reserve strength. Two other possibilities here are Wrenn and Moser, sophomores.

The Tar Heels were to put in two stiff practices today. Coach Snively is rushing things a bit. Much work remains to be done before the opening game with Wake Forest, which looms a dangerous foe. And the beginning of classes on Friday will limit the squad to one practice a day.

Jesse Willard To Referee Fight At Rocky Mount

Jesse Willard, former heavyweight boxing king of the world will referee a fight card at Rocky Mount, Friday night, September 21, at the Easley warehouse, it was made known today.

Willard, the man who whipped Jack Johnson, in one of the most spectacular ring battles ever witnessed in this country, will be the feature of the show although two ring battles have been arranged for the evening.

The first tussle will be between Stanley Sitkolmski, the grappling Boston Pole, and Bill Middlekauff, University of Florida, ex-football star.

The next fight will feature Harry Lewis, Boston Jewish boy, who will meet the "Masked Marvel." The Marvel will fight behind a mask during the entire performance.

WHOLE CONGRESS OF CLOWNS COMING

Clowns are a very necessary part of every big circus. Without them there would be no circus as far as the youngsters are concerned, and the Great Hagenbeck-Wallace show has not overlooked the fact.

This season, 75 of the cleverest "joeys" in spangland were assembled, and howls of merriment are certain to be evoked throughout the gigantic program, when the great show exhibits in Greenville on Thursday, Sept. 27.

Children like clowns, and the clowns like the youngsters, for it is the kiddies, "first, last and always," who loudly express their appreciation of the clown's antics as they endeavor to fill in the pauses between the thrilling displays.

Probably the most popular clown with the youngsters is Otto Griebling, pictured here, giving one of his youthful admirers a ride on his thoroughbred horse "Blixen." The youngster is having the time of his life, for he is talking to a real live clown.

When the huge circus day parade makes its way through the downtown streets show day morning, clowns by the score will be in evidence throughout the two mile long procession.

CHIEF OF SILVER SHIRTS TO BE PLACED ON TRIAL

Asheville, N. C., Sept. 18.—The trial of William Dudley Pelley, chief of the Silver Shirts and founder of Galahad College, is set for next Wednesday in the Buncombe County Superior Court.

Pelley and three associates in the publication of Liberation Magazine by the Galahad Press of Asheville, are charged with violating the North Carolina capital stock issues law or "Blue Sky" statute in offering the public stock in Galahad Press. The State maintains that the defendants made representations that the company was a dividend-paying concern whereas it really was insolvent at the time the stock was floated.

The co-defendants are Robert Summerville, managing editor of Liberation; Don Kellogg, business manager, and H. M. Hardwick, treasurer. All have been placed under bond for trial with the exception of Hardwick, who was indicted a few weeks ago and so far has not been apprehended.

WILSON, N. C., Sept. 18.—Finding food very much of a rarity since he escaped from a Caladonia prison camp on August 29 last, James T. Tyndall, 57, craved a meal so badly Sunday he walked into local police headquarters and gave himself up. He got his meal, also a jail cell, and today was on his way back to Caladonia.

As the police records unfold the tale, Tyndall took a photograph at B. J. Baker, a Greene County farmer in 1929, killing Baker instantly. In January, 1933, Tyndall was given a fifteen-year prison term for the crime after being a fugitive for four years, to be finally captured in Waynesboro, Ga., by Sheriff R. A. Rasberry, of Greene County.
