Our congratulations to the Greenville High School debaters upon their winning both sides in the triangular debates with Wilson and Roanoke Rapids. Public speaking should be a part of each high school student's training and it is encouraging the schools are showing progress along this line by putting out debating teams that can win.

The Red Cross flood relief fund is growing but locally we are still a long way from the quota assigned to this county to raise. Our original quota was $750 which was later increased to $1,000 because of the increased needs in the flood areas. Of this amount only around $600 has been raised so far. Let's not let this matter drag any longer. If you haven't already made a contribution to the fund do so now in order that our county might report that it has done its part to bring relief to suffering humanity in the flood stricken areas.

THE NATIONAL WHIRLIGIG

Despite the understandable secrecy which surrounded the negotiations, Whirligig learns that the two men were asked specifically if they would run should the nomination come their way. Their reply was couched in such thunderously negative tones that the idea of trying to draft them has been forgotten. The outcome depressed certain G. O. P. leaders who had counted on springing a surprise of this sort at the last moment.

The court members take the position that if a jurist stepped into the political arena at this particular time it would inevitably link the judiciary with cheap, selfish politics. It would, in their opinion, destroy the court's prestige and sharpen the demand for Congressional curbs. It would suggest that the member selected for the nomination had framed his decisions in accord with political expediency. The idea didn't appeal to Messrs. Stone or Roberts.

SOLUTION: Organized labor has quietly negotiated a new alliance as a reinforcement of its hitherto unsuccessful invasion of southern industries. It has hooked up with tenant farmers and share-croppers who have long clamored for economic relief.

Labor leaders look for many gains to result from this farmer-worker union. Low-paid tenant farmers or their children in the deep south have long sought employment in factories. They have been willing to accept wages which A. F. of L. organizers brand as "starvation pay." They have constituted an endless reservoir of cheap labor which drew industries from northern states and offset all drives to unionize southern mills.

Labor interests seek to cement this new friendship by forcing enactment of the Rankin-Jones act for the benefit of tenant farmers. So far the measure has met stubborn but concealed resistance in both houses, although apparently favored by the highest political powers. The A. F. of L.'s new attitude may break that jam—and several others.

KING: Henry Wallace's cotton experts are preparing a private report, designed to vindicate the President's handling of this crop problem in the South. A year ago the government's program of pegging cotton at twelve

Golden Rain by Margaret Wildemer

SYNOPSIS: Iris Lanning, poor, aristocratic, eager, has been caught up in the trials of her highly successful Aunt Phina, America's most famous couturiere. Her brother Owen is already in the train, and Sigrid, Phina's partner who also is Owen's fiancée, Phina is asking Iris about her accomplishments, which are numerous. And Iris has just about forgotten Aunt Ella and Uncle Will, at home in Persia, Pa.

Chapter 20 TRUTH FROM PHINA

PHINA asked her some rapid questions in French, and then nodded. "Yes—good. Well, we have a winter before us here in New York, and I hope in spite of lessons you'll have time for some fun. You can ride till late in November in the country—after that in Central Park. Now get your bath and get dressed, and come down to the place for a fitting."

Aunt Phina was an avalanche! Iris was beginning to understand why Owen went on being a designer when he wanted to be an architect. What she couldn't understand was why Uncle Will hadn't meekly married her the first week they met, such a general was she. That strong irresistible sureness that you would do what she said swept you along like a tide.

But, oh, a kind tide! Iris dressed swiftly. Life was beginning! This morning a fitting for beautiful clothes; this afternoon a gorgeous party! ... If only Morgan were to be there, Morgan with his quizzical slow phrases that conveyed subtle comfort and encouragement and admiration!

Well, Morgan was there in the background, waiting. Love with its strong hands out to hold her. Perhaps he'd come over soon, or she'd run back to him—they were young, and there was plenty of time to devote, meanwhile, here were the pleasures and palaces and Morgan was altogether too cynical about life. ...

She spied through her bath, and, in an echo of remembering Morgan and Uncle Will and her other life, began to sing as she went downstairs, the old signal:

"Just as sure as it is half past eight, Someone's tapping at the garden gate—"

"What's that you're singing?" Phina called from the desk where she was going over a stack of bills like intelligent lightning.

"One of Grandmother Lanning's funny old songs that Uncle Will used to like to the guitar, in the evening. I used to dress up in her clothes and put on performances for him, bless his heart, and sometimes I did it for parties."

"Something Ella taught you?" sharply. Ella was the one chink in Phina's smooth armor.

"No ... Aunt Phina, after all you're a wonderful person and you've done it all yourself. Why do you mind about poor Aunt Ella?" The handsome dominant well-groomed middle-aged woman sitting at her desk, mistress of herself and of most other things about her, changed before Iris's eyes.

She became suddenly twenty years younger and forty times angrier; the outraged capable pretty thing who had come to the aristocratic old town with only a needle between herself and the wolf at the door, half defiant, half frightened. Her face worked. The words poured out in a stream.

"Because Ella Lanning had been entrenched in money and position a generation ago—because Jean and I were 'common sewing girls' as she called us—and because she was insane on the subject of your father, she was insolent—merciless—cruel. She broke off my marriage with Will—she wrecked Jean's with Lawrence. I've gone a long way. I'll end higher than any Lanning ever dreamed of being. When I am, I'll go there again—and show her—tell her."

AUNT PHINA stopped, panting, white, shaking. Iris shrank back. Was this the driving force behind that dominating capability? Phina Ross saw what effect she had made, and was suddenly herself again, the quiet masterful unmoved woman. She smiled.

"I went theatrical," as you young things say, didn't I? That's all nonsense, of course. I really owe the poor soul a good deal; I doubt if I'd have made as much success or money without that feeling. I'd really supposed there was nothing left of it. Now sing your dramatic old auntie the song about the garden gate. I want to know everything you can do. You seem to have all the talents." She put an affectionate hand on Iris's shoulder.

Glad of some outlet for her own shaken feelings, Iris went to the piano and sang the song through with all its outmoded gaieties and archnesses. Phina clapped when she had done; she was completely herself again.

"Darling, you are nearly a professional discus, bless your heart. We must work on that. I'll get you costumes. Now come along."

"Phina's shop was not like any shop Iris knew; not like a shop at all, indeed. An ostentatiously quiet window with one hat and one dress tossed on a chair; an almost invisible sign.

Within, two large rooms, one with paneled pale green walls, one furnished as a replica of one of Marie Antoinette's, so she was told later. A handful of bright particolored necklaces hung on one table, a dress or two across chairs. A fireplace full of flowers at one end, with chairs grouped about it; three or four lovely young girls, "types," drifting about, gay and docile and flattering to the five or six women who were being shown—as if one's relatives did it, rather superior relatives—clothes from behind the panels.

An electric stiffening went through the rooms with Phina's quiet arrival. The customers became excited; the sales people intensified their manners, whether these were gay or scornful or coaxing.

A tall awkward girl with a face that might have been handsome if it had been less tense, broke away from her salesgirl and rushed over to Phina. Her attitude was that of a schoolgirl toward a worshiped teacher.

"Oh, Miss Phina! Oh, Miss Phina!" Her insistent voice rang through the room, and she stopped short, embarrassed and frightened. Phina spoke to her very much like a teacher, Iris thought; kindly, a little reprovingly.

"Now, my dear Miss Camilla," she said, looking brightly up at the girl's stooped height, "you don't need anything more at all this spring. Your mother would think you were horribly extravagant if I let you go on buying."

Iris, waiting at a little distance, was sure she heard one of the exquisite goddess-blondes snicker. There was some joke about the poor girl.

"But—but Mother won't mind, honestly she won't at all," said Camilla, jerking her shoulders under the smart coat and flushing a dull red under her unpowdered skin.

"WHAT you need is more time in the beauty parlor," Phina said almost severely. "If you wear your clothes properly, and look after your make-up better, that's all you need."

"But I do need one more evening frock, anyway!" pleaded this topsy-turvy customer. Phina shook her head indulgently.

"Very well, if you must, but speak to your mother first," she said. "Oh, is this your niece? Is this Owen's sister? Oh, she's lovely!" said Camilla with her uncontrolled voice. "And she looks like him too. You look just like Owen!" She stared at Iris with the same devotion she had given Phina. "Do come see me! Or have luncheon with me tomorrow."

The enigma was solved—poor girl! It was Owen's designs. Owen himself, in fact, that Camilla came for. But the girl was so helpless, so honest and inept in her schoolgirl crush that Iris could only be sorry for her. If this was a New York society girl, one needn't feel backward!

Phina made the luncheon engagement tentative, shifted Camilla adroitly to the head saleswoman, and beckoned Iris upstairs to the fitting room.

"Is she—" Iris began, half pitying, half laughing. "She is," said Phina irritably, and yet with an amused lifted eyebrow. "My dear, that poor girl has everything; except personal attraction. Her mother turned her over to me to dress, in despair; and I really was doing well with her. All on earth that ails her is a complete conviction that she is awkward and ugly and nobody loves her. I have told Owen a dozen times that if he had mercy on her and married her she would bloom. She isn't actually plain—it's her manner and voice. Iria, you could help the poor child. Will you?"

"Oh, not to marry Owen!" "It might be for his best interests," said Phina. "But I don't mean that, foolish child. Don't be romantic. In spite of her money and position she's the Poor Little Rich Girl. She took to you—you can do something kind there. Be her friend, my dear."

realistic lines predicted in many informed quarters for 1940 may get off to a flying start this year. All that is needed would be for the Republicans to nominate London and for Borah then to carry out his threat of abandoning the "party of big business" by going over to the Roosevelt camp. The odds are against Borah's open defection—but it could happen and the possibility should not be ignored.

Already most of the leading conservatives of both parties are lined up in support of London. If Borah joins the New Dealers and takes the liberal wing of the G. O. P. with him there would be in reality two new parties under old labels—each standing for definite right or left wing policies. That would clear the political atmosphere enormously and pave the way for the final discard of outworn loyalties based on 1880 traditions.

G. O. P. leaders privately concede that such a development would just about ruin their chances for success this November. But they cling firmly to the hope that Borah will once again justify his reputation as "the 90 yard wonder sprinter who never finishes his 100 yard race."

PAINT: Some astute New Yorkers describe the corporate surplus tax as "the smartest move the New Dealers have thought up yet." They base this appraisal on the beneficial effect it is expected to have on heavy industry.

Most people think of corporate surpluses as cash. This is rarely a true picture. A large part of them are tied up in machinery accounts and much of the machinery is at least obsolete. So one result of the tax would be to speed up the renovation of machinery—which would stimulate business for steel, machine and locomotive manufacturers, etc.

The administration has long been concerned about heavy industry's lag behind the recovery parade. The continued high level of unemployment is blamed largely on this lag. Obviously Mr. Roosevelt cannot undertake to promote the welfare of specific industries while neglecting others. But the tax proposal would in effect accomplish this without advertising it. This angle of the tax program will become apparent in due course if the levy is enacted. Meanwhile it is one more powerful reason why big business has protested so faintly against the surplus tax.

BID: Don't take Dr. Townsend's announced support of Senator Borah too seriously. It would be quite something if the Doctor really intended to battle actively for Borah right to the finish and if he could swing his legions in disciplined formation behind him. There's plenty of room for doubt on both counts.

As to the first, Townsend has changed his political mind four times in the past few months; third party, no third party, concentrate on Congress and ignore the presidency, send our own delegation to the Democratic convention. On past performance, he is due to change it several times more before election. Moreover, he must be aware—if he or his advisers have even rudimentary political acumen—that Borah personally is going absolutely nowhere in the presidential derby. There's no point in shooting your roll on a sure loser.

As to the second, the Townsend movement is split several ways with internal dissensions. There's no real leadership—consequently no real way of developing political solidarity among the rank and file. New York realists frankly appraise the Doctor's latest gesture as a bid to remain in the headlines and to remind his followers that he's on the job—nothing more.

DEADLOCK: The Post Office Department and the Interstate Commerce Commission are running neck and neck in their contest to determine who is the real boss of the airlines. The Post Office scored a touchdown when Braniff Airways knuckled under to its authority (as predicted in this column) and raised its pilots' pay rather than risk losing its mail contract. That seemed to establish the Department's authority pretty firmly. But the I. C. C. countered by ruling in its own favor and against the Post Office on the latter's appeal that it should have jurisdiction—rather than the Commission—over Transcontinental Western Air's application to set up a non-mail schedule from Albuquerque to San Francisco. The Post Office privately claims foul on the ground that the I. C. C. was both player and referee—no; nobody will listen. So the deadlock persists—and is likely to do so for some time.

WASHINGTON DAYBOOK

By HERBERT PLUMMER

Washington, March 28—Politicians here believe Senator Vandenberg of Michigan, prominently mentioned for the Republican presidential nomination, tripped badly when he introduced his resolution in the senate calling on the farm administration to make public all benefit payments in excess of $10,000.

Some go so far as to say it is the first major political misstep which can be charged against him since his name has figured in all discussions of the probable G. O. P. nominee at Cleveland. While he stoutly maintained he was "asking only for information bearing upon the public policy involved," publication of these figures would have wide repercussions on the political front.

Cached in the files of the farm administration are records of benefit payments which, if made public, would necessitate a lot of explaining in a national election year such as this. AAA checks during the past three years have been mailed to some of the most prominent political personages in the country, including those who have both praised and criticized the administration's program.

Charge "Snooping" Vandenberg's proposal also runs counter to the very thing Republicans and anti-New Dealers have condemned so strongly—prying into the private affairs of the individual. Republicans were outspoken in their opposition to the so-called "pink slip" law which made income tax returns available to the public, and were instrumental in having it repealed. They have pounced on the Black lobby committee for endeavoring to obtain copies of private telegrams. And there have been other examples where alleged "snooping" on the part of the government has aroused their ire.

Injects Sectionalism Issue From the standpoint of the coming campaign, there is another important aspect to be considered, both by Senator Vandenberg as a possible G. O. P. presidential candidate as well as by his party. The west is admittedly the battleground for the 1936 campaign. Records of benefit payments to farmers under AAA relief the following interesting comparisons:

For two years that AAA was in operation, forty-two counties in the state of Iowa received total benefit payments of more than a million dollars each. For three years under AAA, only five counties in the state of Mississippi received total benefit payments exceeding that amount, and in the state of Arkansas only eight. Arkansas and Mississippi contain huge plantations.

In the state of Texas, over a period of three years, thirty-four counties were recipients of benefit payments in excess of a million dollars. In Kansas, the home state of Governor Landon, thirty-three counties received benefit payments of more than a million dollars in two years.

It's easy to see what a political hornet's nest the Vandenberg resolution, if carried out, could stir up. NOTICE OF RESALE UNDER AND BY VIRTUE of an order made by His Honor, J. Mrs. Person Hostess to D. A. R. The Colonel Alexander McAllister chapter D. A. R. held one of the most delightful meetings of the year Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. T. A. Person. A pleasing color scheme of yellow and white touched lightly with fine red lilies was carried out.

Mrs. R. W. Isley, the regent, presided, and led the ritual, flag salute and the American creed. Mrs. A. B. Alderman rendered the chaplain's service, closing with the poem "Mary."

The regent appointed several committees, and heard reports. The report of the treasurer, Mrs. J. I. Morgan, was most gratifying. Mrs. Erwin of Eureka, brought interesting report of the State Convention at Asheville, one outstanding phase of which was our education work at Croonore, the mountain school, sponsored by the D. A. R. Mrs. Person presented a set of books to the Greene County Library at Sugar Hill. The regent then in a few well-chosen words, introduced Mrs. S. J. Everett, guest speaker for the afternoon. Mrs. Everett, in her own inimitable style, thrilled her hearers as she spoke on "Educational Shrines in America." Beginning with Harvard, through the land of the oldest, she vividly portrayed and interpreted the distinctive personality of each of these institutions, as distinctive as that among individuals. An enthusiastic vote of thanks was tendered Mrs. Everett.

The guests were then invited into the dining room where, seated at a table of rare loveliness, Mrs. Charles O'H. Laughinghouse poured tea, and Mrs. Robt. H. Wright served a salad. In this they were assisted by Mrs. J. W. Parker, Mrs. R. W. Isley, Mrs. N. F. Palmer, and Mrs. J. L. Fleming, who passed sandwiches, pickles and bon-bons. Doughty and Miss Florence Bishop of Mt. Pleasant, Mich.; Mrs. Stamps of Snow Hill and Mrs. Durward Parker of Elm City.—Reported.

Fine Arts Festival

Beginning April 18th and extending through the 21st, a fine arts festival will be held at the Woman's Club. The occasion last year was regarded by the community as a cultural and social success, and it is hoped the festival this year will be enjoyed even more, and more benefit will accrue from it. It is given free of charge to the public in general and everyone is invited to view the exhibits and attend the programs now being planned.

This year the festival will feature work of North Carolina and local artists. In addition to paintings there will be exhibits of handicraft, needlecraft, and other exhibitions which will be of interest. Saturday afternoon, April 18, at 2 o'clock, the doors will be thrown open to the public. The doors this year will be open also on Sunday afternoon from 3 until 6 P. M. A fine musical program has been arranged to take place between these hours.

From time to time, as tentative plans take concrete form, other announcements will be made in regard to this forthcoming, outstanding event.

A. A. U. W. Meets Monday

The A. A. U. W. invites all who are interested in contemporary drama to come to Ragsdale Hall at 7:30 on Monday evening. For her reading at that time, Miss Emma L. Hooper has selected Saint Joan, written by Bernard Shaw ten years ago and presented brilliantly by Katharine Cornell in New York this winter.

Shaw's Joan is an appealing "combination of inept youth and academic ignorance with great natural capacity, push, courage, devotion, originality, and oddity." As for the history, Shaw modestly admits that the play contains all that need be known of the Maid of Orleans. Certainly this tragedy is strangely convincing and satisfying.

Greenville High School Debaters Win Triangular Debate

Both the affirmative and negative teams of the local high school debaters were victorious yesterday. Reading from left to right, the debaters are pictured above: Jeter Oakley, Miss Frances Spilman, who upheld the affirmative, Lewis Gaylord, Jr., and Miss Geraldine Harris, who upheld the negative side. The Greenville affirmative team defeated Roanoke Rapids in Wilson and the local negative team won over Wilson in Roanoke Rapids in the annual triangular debate. As a result of their double victory, the local debaters will go to Chapel Hill Thursday, April 9, to compete with winners of other sections.

HIGHWAY LAW IS SAID BE BEST Visiting Officials Declare State Making Fine Progress

Raleigh, March 28.—North Carolina is at last on the right track and making real progress in reducing the number of automobile and highway accidents, B. R. Stroup, field representative of the National Safety Council in the south-eastern states, and Director A. W. Boland of the motor vehicle division of the South Carolina Highway Commission, said in the course of a visit here.

They paid especial attention to the new driver's license law and the manner in which it is being administered by the Division of Highway Safety of the Department of Revenue.

"The North Carolina driver's license law is one of the best in the country and one that has real teeth in it," Stroup, who was formerly director of the South Carolina motor vehicle division said, "Drivers in other states are already finding out about it and are realizing that it is not safe to take any chances in North Carolina."

The provision in the law under which those who are convicted of drunken driving immediately lose their driving permits for one year and for an additional year on a second offense, are splendid. I wish more states had the same type of law."

"I wish you could tell us how you get the newspapers of the state to cooperate and especially to print the names of those convicted of drunken driving whose licenses are revoked," Director Boland said. "We revoke the licenses of those convicted of drunken driving in South Carolina for 60 days on the first conviction and 120 days on a second. Our law would be much more effective if we could revoke the driving permits for one year, as you do here in North Carolina, however. We are also hampered by the fact that we have to try most of our cases in magistrates courts and that

Attention is Called That Now Is Time To Curb House Fly

Common Fly Described as One of Most Dangerous of All Germ Carriers Found in Country

The health officer, Doctor N. Thomas Ennett, today called attention of the citizens of Pitt county to the fact that now is the time to begin to suppress the fly nuisance.

The common house fly is one of the most dangerous of all germ carriers. Typhoid Fever and other intestinal diseases are transmitted by common house fly, the officer pointed out.

Dr. Ennett issued the following statement:

"The suppression of the house fly resolves itself simply into the matter of cleanliness. The chief breeding place of the common house fly is the horse stable, but exposed garbage is also a breeding place. As flies are capable of travelling quite a distance, in some instances as much as several miles, the control of flies becomes not a single family problem but truly a community problem."

"Garbage should be kept in water-tight cans and with good covers and the garbage removed frequently, especially in warm weather. Refuse in back yards and market places should be frequently and regularly taken away. Where flies breed in spite of all effort at prevention, there are several ways with which to deal with them, the fly trap, fly poison and the fly swatter."

GREENVILLE HIGH SCHOOL GIRLS' TEAMS MADE GOOD RECORD

Local High School Teams Made Fine Season Record

Boys Won 17 of 19 Games; Girls Five Out of Seven

A backward glance at the basketball season of the Greenville high school which ended several weeks ago, reminds one that it was one of the most successful ever experienced by the local boys and girls.

The Greensies made a total of 641 points during the season as compared to the 309 points made by their opponents. George Lautares was high scorer for the locals this season, with 140 points to his credit.

The Greenville boys not only enjoyed a splendid season of regular basketball, but emerged victorious in the A. C. C. tournament in Wilson by winning all five games they participated in.

The girls' team likewise experienced a successful season, losing only two games during the entire season. One of these defeats was caused by the sextet from Kinston, who made one point in the last second of play. The other was administered by the girls from Washington early in the season.

The most notable achievement for the girls' team during the past season was their decided victory over Washington, February 14. This was one of the fastest and smoothest girls' games ever to be played in Greenville, and the 19-10 victory over the girls was exactly what they needed to fight through to victory in all of their other games. This was Washington's first defeat in five years.

Of the seven official games played, the Greenville girls were winners in five of these. Under the supervision of Miss Corinna Mial, the girls showed excellent progress throughout the season.

Those who were regulars on the team were: Dorothy Merritt, Marie Simpson, Rachel Blanchard, Ethel Gaston, Bobbie Baublitz, Phoebe Nisbet, Madeline Woolard, Helen Flanagan, Jeanne Jones and Annie Joyner.

One fly destroyed in April is equivalent to killing a million in August. As a protection against flies, screening is absolutely essential. And remember that the screen with a hole in it or a screen door which does not fit closely, gives little or no protection against flies."

SPORT SLANTS

Leroy Parmelee will have to come through in sensational style on the mound for the St. Louis Cardinals to compensate Manager Frankie Frisch for the loss of the services of Burgess Whitehead, who went to the Giants in exchange for Parmelee, Alyn Stout and Al Cuccinello.

Frisch cannot expect any help from the speedy Lyle (Punch) Judy, the 22-year-old recruit who stole 107 bases for Springfield in the Western Association last season and fielded sensationally with that farm club of the Cardinals. The young infielder has been forced to undergo an operation on his shoulder as the result of injuries sustained in an automobile accident. Any help Frankie will get is likely to come from the diminutive Pat Ankenman, who came up from Columbus.

Ankenman played shortstop for the Red Birds last season and is one of the smallest athletes ever to play in the big leagues. He is 5 feet 4 inches tall and scales around 130 pounds. He looks like the best bet for a berth as utility infielder for the Cardinals.

Frisch never gave Al Cuccinello much consideration for the utility role despite the fact that Al played in 48 games for the Giants last year. For one thing, he made too many errors and was not the fastest second baseman in the league in making double plays. His stick work too, left much to be desired.

Frisch plans to play in about 100 games this coming season. And that means he will have to find someone to take care of the other 54.

Whitehead took care of second base in 80 games last year while Frisch was resting his legs and did well enough to start the experts predicting that Frisch's playing days were over and that Burgess was destined to be the Cardinals' regular second baseman. He was no Frisch at bat, he hit .263 in the 107 games he took part in, but he showed himself to be an alert, strong-armed second baseman. He took part in 43 double plays and fielded for an average of .980, finishing right on the heels of his boss in the official fielding averages. In addition, Whitehead filled in at short in six games and played third base in eight.

A Regular Now

The trade that shifted Whitehead to the Giants should raise him to stardom if the youth has it in him. In the first place he begins the season as a regular, not a substitute, secure in the knowledge that the job is his as long as he can produce. Bill Terry is banking heavily on him. In the second place, he will be working alongside one of the best shortstops in the game, Dick Bartell. Bartell, a hustler, will keep Whitehead moving at top speed.

While Whitehead steps into a rare opportunity in the spot at second base he will also be confronted with the task of making the fans at the Polo Grounds forget the flashy fielding of Hughey Critz, who thrilled the Giant fans in recent years.

DURHAM WINS OPENING GAME

Greenies Lose in First Baseball Game of Season

By making 6 errors during the last two innings, the Greenville High school baseball team lost their opening tilt of the season to Durham High, last year's state champions by a score of 6 to 4.

All of Durham's runs were unearned, whereas the Greenies put together two walks and four straight base hits from the bats of Pierce, Forbes, Hatem, and Hamilton to account for all of their tallies. Greenville went into the eighth inning sporting a 4 to 2 lead, but at that point the infield blew up and handed the Bull City boys four runs that proved the margin of victory. L. G. Hamilton and Howard Hodges did the pitching for the Greenies, and both turned in fine performances.

The local club will meet the strong Raleigh High school nine at Third Street Stadium this coming Tuesday. Raleigh was runner up to Durham for the state championship last year.
