Show Pleases.

Those who saw the performance of the play "Post Road" at the college on Saturday night are very enthusiastic about it and agree that the promise made by the Federal Theatre troupe that they would bring to Greenville a high class professional production of an up-to-the-minute Broadway type of play was fulfilled to the minutest detail. Not only the acting, but the staging, lighting, stage management, everything was done in a truly professional manner, which until this project was begun could rarely be seen outside of a few big cities and at regular theatres.

The play was wisely selected so that only one setting was needed for all scenes so that there were no waits between scenes. The cast was chosen with such professional skill that not one actor or actress failed to give splendid evidence of his or her ability. The veterans of many plays and Broadway experience shined that they had lost none of their power and the younger ones proved they were ready to take their places when the big chances come.

The play is a racy thriller, with kidnapers, police, and innocent people brought together in a tourist home on the Boston Post Road, where the spinster landlady outwits the whole crowd. Miss Julia Fasset was splendid as the spinster. The hypocritical old gangster posing as a minister was played remarkably well by Halbert W. Brown. The two who furnished the comedy roles that continually brought the house down were Thomas Carnahan as "George" with his radio and his wife "May," played by Miss Mildred Brown. Guy Standing as Dr. Spencer, the brains of the kidnaping plot, was excellent. Miss Alma Brock as the girl who broke down and deserted, and Miss Sally Sanders as the nurse, both did intensely dramatic acting. All the minor characters gave fine support to those in the leads.

The people of Greenville and the college have had many opportunities to see good plays well produced by such "Little Theatre" groups as the Carolina Playmakers and other amateur or semi-professional groups but have rarely had a chance to see a real professional performance of any play on a home stage.

There were perhaps several reasons for the fact that there was not a large audience out Saturday night is a bad night, and the last of the school year when examinations are on hand for college students, and is not a good time for a play. But it may be that the public does not yet realize that a big thing is being carried on here in this state.

First Church of Christ, Scientist. "Soul and Body," was the subject of the lesson-sermon in all churches and societies of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, May 24.

The golden text was from I Peter 2:11. "Dearly beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul."

Among the citations which comprised the lesson-sermon was the following from the Bible: "The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!" (Matt. 6:22-23).

The lesson-sermon also included the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Knowing that soul and its attributes were forever manifested through man, the Master healed the sick, gave sight to the blind, hearing to the deaf, feet to the lame, thus bringing to light the scientific action of the divine Mind on human minds and bodies and giving a better understanding of soul and salvation."

Y. W. C. A. Pageant.

The presentation of the college Y. W. C. A. pageant, "The House of Comradeship," which has for years been an annual college event, was especially lovely and interesting as given yesterday evening. The twilight scene by the lakeside, with the characters in white robes with the bands of blue, the Y. W. C. A. colors, building the house, and the other students on the opposite bank, all reflected in the lake, made an impressive sight.

The students whom their fellow-students think are most nearly representative of certain qualities that make character or those that render special service to humanity, had been elected by secret ballot, and were not announced until they took these parts in the pageant.

Miss Joyce Harrell as Friendship; Miss Elizabeth Dixon Johnson, the new president of the Student Government Association, as Co-operation; and Miss Ellen Jenkins, the outgoing president of the Student Government Association, as Service, formed the guide-posts to the House. Miss Catherine Wallace, the new president of the Y. W. C. A., represented Love, the Foundation of the House.

Sincerely, represented by Miss Frances Edgerton; Loyalty, by Miss Mildred McDonald; Trust, by Miss Belle Kearney; and Courage, by Miss Naomi Newell, formed the building stones of the House. The dwellers in the House and those taking their parts were: Joy, Miss Ruby Lucas; Sympathy, Miss Juanita Davis; Understanding, Miss Janie Outland; and Helpfulness, Miss Margaret Barck.

The plan of the House was outlined by these as they took their places and held the chain that made the outline. Miss Frances Edgerton entered first and spoke the prologue. Miss Hattie Pearl Mahard, the outgoing president of the Y. W. C. A., who represented the Spirit of the Y. W. C. A., was the first of the spirits in the procession, and was the interpreter of all the others. As they entered, one by one, each before taking her place, told of her part in building the House.

At intervals there was singing by the choir, which was hidden in the summer house on the island that was the scene of the pageant, and the audience joined in the responsive reading.

Taps sounded in the distance by the bugler, Charles Futrell, and the singing of the recessional. Follow the Gleam," ended the pageant and the regular Y. W. C. A. year.

At the twilight hour on next Sunday, as a part of commencement, the Y. W. C. A. will hold a service, using a beautiful candle-lighting service. At this time, Dr. B. W. Spilman, will deliver the message. The pageant presented last night was used for a number of years as the commencement vesper service, and was given in the wood on the western slope of the campus. For the past three years, the candle-lighting service has been used at that time, and the pageant used for the last regular Y. W. C. A. service.

Each year adaptations and changes are made in the wording of the pageant, but the chief part of it remains the same from year to year.

Senior Play Friday.

The Greenville High School senior play, "So We'll Just Pretend," is to be presented in the high school auditorium on Friday, May 29, at 8:00 p. m. This promises to be one of the best productions in the history of the high school. The play is under the direction of Miss Helen Dorch, who has had extensive experience in professional work.

The plot of the play is about young people and is particularly adapted to a cast of high school age. It is clever, interesting and not too long. This will be the first feature of commencement and it is hoped that the patrons will be present to enjoy an evening of pleasant amusement and again to show the students that they believe in them.

Music Recital.

Wednesday night at 8 o'clock at the Third Street School, Mrs. Charles A. White will present her older music pupils in a recital.

Those taking part are: Ruby Taylor, Sidney Johnson, Allie Jane Harrington, Anne Garrett, Eleanor Rives, Rachel Blanchard, Laura Elizabeth Haskins, Daisy King Mayo, Myra Stancill Blount, Mar. Woolard, Louise Kilgo, Mary Belle Robertson and Helen Settle.

On Thursday night at 8 o'clock at the Third Street School, Mrs. White will present her younger pupils in "A Musical Journey Around the World." Those taking part are: Marian Cox, Sarah Frances Williams, Eloise Warren, Lucie Clyde Blount, Dorothy Nell Henderson, Julia Anna Bland, Josie Barnes White, Jane Smith, Susanne Kilgo, John Wooten, Mary Andrews Whit-hard, Hennie Ruth Whichard, Margaret Johnston, Sammie White, Margaret Lee Duke, Pauline Bell, H. R. Goodall, Ed Batchelor, Ralph Garrett, Warren Ficklen, Charles Ives, Elizabeth Bridgers.

WASHINGTON DAYBOOK

By PRESTON GROVER
Washington — It must have been with a sigh of relief that Senator McNary scanned the reports of his success over Townsend's opposition in the Oregon primary.

Two months before the primary some of his close friends said he had expressed deep concern about the Townsend vote, where the Old Ag Revolving Pension movement (OARP) reputedly was strongly entrenched. No doubt the result was studied closely also in Idaho by those who looked to the possibility of Senator Borah returning from the presidential wars to contest again for reelection.

In a letter written to an Idaho constituent early this year, Mr. Borah stated that his description of the Townsend plan as unsound might bring about his defeat for reelection.

Associates of Governor C. Ben Ross of Idaho, who is expected to seek the Democratic nomination for Senator to oppose Borah, have counted the Townsend vote as a factor which might turn the usual tide of popularity that in the past has swept the senator again and again into office.

Townsend leaders in Oregon reported a 150,000 membership but a very small percentage of that number supported Townsend candidates against McNary.

How well can they be expected to support avowed Townsend candidates in other states? Many nervous congressmen and a few senators in Townsend strongholds would like to know whether the Oregon primary answers their own dilemma.

The return to the United States of several ambassadors for extended leaves has stirred comment in Washington as to the part they may play in the coming campaign. Breckinridge Long, ambassador to Italy, is here for a 90-day leave. He was on the platform committee at Houston in 1928.

Coming soon on leave also are Ambassadors William C. Bullitt from Moscow and Josephus Daniels from Mexico City. Diplomatic circles here saw a possibility that Claude G. Bowers, ambassador to Spain, and Jesse I. Straus, ambassador to France, also would return.

THE NATIONAL WHIRLIGIG

(Continued from Page One) holding the Guffey price-fixing provisions. And Justice Cardozo of the minority took a sly poke at the Chief Justice by quoting the latter's Appalachian decision in which he held that coal mining was an "interstate" activity. No wonder the Justices are looking forward to vacation after a winter of weekly acrimonious arguments among themselves. LIGHTNING: Secretary Ickes let a dangerous New Deal secret out of the bag when he testified in court that he suspected internal sabotage of PWA. The same condition exists in other departments and emergency agencies, and it will develop explosively during the campaign. Key officials as well as subordinates were hired helter-skelter during the early days of the administration. Some got in through friendship with holdovers from the Hoover and Coolidge regimes. Many were named without regard for their political affiliations, and hundreds of anti-New Dealers held confidential positions. In three years there has been a tremendous turnover because of individual inefficiency or politics. Naturally, those who lost out are sore. The Republicans, as Whirligig pointed out some time ago, have been smart enough to contact the soreheads either at Washington or back home. They are filling their files with sensational information to be disclosed at the proper time. Ickes knows it — which explains his testimony — and so do other Cabinet members. But they're in the dark as to where or when the blow will hit them. BRUQUE: R. W. Morrison's resignation from the Federal Reserve Board was not the casual, careless act which White Houseers represent it to be. The Texas Democrat and business man simply "took a walk" because he couldn't reconcile himself to certain administration policies. Mr. Morrison, a Graner protégé, did not clash with Chairman E-

cies over any specific reserve policy, as reported, although two such dominant personalities could never pull in harness. What happened was that the self-made Texas disagreed with certain major issues sponsored by Mr. Roosevelt. He disagreed with the farm policy of reducing production and he believed that economic recovery would come soonest through low rather than high prices. Mr. Roosevelt argued the contrary in his Baltimore address, and Mr. Eccles subscribes to that theory. The brusque Texan did not even observe the proprieties in quitting. He dined with a Reserve Board colleague before he left for home several weeks ago, but never mentioned his plans. Boss Eccles didn't hear of the resignation until the White House informed him that Mr. Morrison had "sat right down and written a letter" as the song says.

Kin of Roosevelt Opens Fire on RFC

New York By JAMES McMULLIN DOG-FIGHT: Governor Lehman's decision not to be a candidate for reelection is a severe blow to Democratic chances of carrying New York but it may also have considerable weight in the outcome of the national election. As a Democratic vote getter in New York State he was in a class by himself. Moreover the defeat of his social security bill was the best state issue his party had and no other leader can capitalize on it nearly so effectively. Tammany sees the situation as a heaven-sent opportunity to make trouble for Jim Farley and will be out to regain its former ascendancy in the state party machine. Farley will be battling hard to retain his grip. In many ways Attorney General John J. Bennett is the logical candidate. He has quietly built up a formidable personal organization with the governorship as his goal. But he doesn't tie in definitely with either the Roosevelt-Farley wing or with Tammany — which complicates the situation still further. About the only certainty is a bitter dog-fight for control of the New York Democracy. Roosevelt and Farley will probably win out — by force or diplomacy or both — but the scrap will seriously weaken the party for the November showdown.

SURPRISE: On the other side, Lehman's withdrawal was an amazing tonic to Republican morale. The G. O. P. had previously talked hopefully of winning New York, but its chances now are 100 per cent improved. The psychological uplift it marked in financial and industrial quarters as well as among the politicians. This will mean bigger and better contributions to the national party war chest—a vital factor in the prospects for national victory. Hardly any Democratic development could have given as much aid and comfort to the enemy. The Republican nomination for the New York governorship has become a real prize instead of an empty honor. Paradoxically that's the ant in the asparagus. Hot rivalry might develop to blight the tender plant of harmony that has been so carefully cultivated in the state organization. That's one headache party chiefs must face. The Governor's "Coolidge act" was a complete surprise to most of his friends and political associates. Within the month he had privately indicated that he intended to sacrifice his own inclinations to the wishes of his friends in the White House. But in the past two weeks several personal factors — chiefly the death of his brother Arthur — combined to tip the scales the other way.

SAVED: Oil men are getting a good laugh—now that it's over—out of Governor Richard W. Leche's comic opera in Louisiana. But for a few days he had them running in circles. The crude oil price structure is delicately adjusted and, when Leche allowed the Pelican Oil Co. to cut loose with unrestricted production in the Rodessa field — his official reason being that Louisiana needed the extra tax revenue — the move threatened to knock the bottom out of the market. Oil leaders and authorities in other petroleum states pleaded vainly with the governor to be reasonable. Even Secretary Ickes got hot and bothered, but there didn't seem to be much he could do about it. Nature and slick detective work combined to save the day. Nature cut the gas pressure and lowered production in the Pelican wells. Detective work revealed a political tie-up in the Pelican Co. that might have been quite embarrassing if the details had been made public. When this was brought to Mr. Leche's attention he immediately ordered the restoration of production restrictions comparable to those in neighboring states.

AMENDMENT: Pronouncements of labor leaders on the Supreme Court's nullification of the Guffey coal act clearly revealed the close cooperation which organized labor is giving the President. Both John Lewis and Bill Green — who're breathing fiery imprecations against the decision — carefully abstained from clamoring for a constitutional amendment.

This was because Mr. Roosevelt has made it plain to them that he does not want the amendment issue raised as a major factor in the campaign. He learned his lesson from the "horse-and-buggy" faux pas after the NRA had been judicially repudiated. There will be no repetition of that mistake.

But next year will probably be another story if FDR is reelected. And if he doesn't go to bat for amendment of the Constitution to broaden the powers of the federal government, the left wing third party — which will then be ready for officials launching — certainly will.

ZONE: Curiously a number of leading New York conservatives agree that the Guffey ruling discloses a fundamental weakness in our constitutional structure.

One top-flight financier remarks: "There is plainly a legal twilight zone which neither the federal nor the state governments can reach under the Supreme Court's interpretation of the Constitution. Companies that get into that zone can defy all governmental efforts to regulate them. That's an unhealthy situation and I would certainly favor a reasonable constitutional amendment to cure it."

Peace Dramatization Draws Big Audience

An audience that filled the Pitt Theatre to overflowing last night heard in responsive quiet the dramatization, "The Unknown Soldier Speak," sponsored by the Greenville Council for Peace Action.

The playlet was a dialogue between the Unknown Soldier, who lies restless and rebellious under the impressive stone at Arlington, and a minister who had come to the tomb at night to think out in the hush of the cemetery his position on the problem of war and peace.

The part of the minister was taken by the Rev. G. R. Combs and that of the soldier by Robert Move. Both entered into the spirit of the parts so completely that the audience was carried along with them and made to feel that they were overhearing just what two such men might speak.

The dialogue brought out the dead conscript's unwillingness to go to war, then his later belief that, because of the death of himself and his comrades in a "war to end war," men in centuries to come would live safe and free from war's horrors. Then it showed his bitterness as the realization was forced on him that the war spirit is still strong in the world and his sacrifice has been vain.

The real heroes, the soldier says, the ones who died for a great cause, were those who died fighting for peace. He spoke of the great Russian, Trotsky, who said "I realize that my best good comes from unity with all men everywhere." He told of the Hon. Arthur Ponsonby's memorial to the British government with its thousands of names of men who have pledged themselves to oppose war and refuse to take part in one. He spoke of the honor due the grave of America's Eugene V. Debs, who not only served a term in prison during the World War but went to a dishonored grave because of his militant stand against the war, because he believed that peace must be bought with a price and was willing to help pay the price.

Near the end the minister read from H. G. Wells' recent book a passage that says to save civilization those who love peace and beauty must form "an open conspiracy" to get the world back out of the hands of those who would destroy it, and the imperative first step in this direction must be an active and decisive fight against war.

The dialogue was a dramatization of a powerful sermon given some months ago by the well known New York minister, the Rev. John Hayes Holmes.

The service at the theatre was opened by an explanation of its purpose and spirit by the Rev. W. A. Ryan, president of the Greenville Council for Peace Action.

Following this, the High School Glee Club, under the direction of Miss Oma Shindler, sang Kipling's "Recessional," with Miss Eva Hodges at the piano.

Dr. Combs concluded the program by a prayer for peace throughout the world.

The stage was simply but beautifully arranged. The white tomb with its garland and the two white seats, one on either side stood out vividly in the dim light and against the somber curtains. The playlet was produced under the able direction of Miss Helen Dorch, with Mrs. W. A. Ryan as chairman of the general committee, and Mrs. H. L. Rivers in charge of the properties. The production was able to be presented on a suitable stage through the courtesy of the Pitt Theatre.
