Say Northern Flank on Catalan Front Wiped Out

LOSS MINIMIZED BY GOVERNMENT

Communique Admits Only Loss of Some Heights; Says Other Attacks Repulsed

Hendaye, France, Aug. 9.—(AP)—The Spanish Insurgents reported today that the Government's entire northern flank on the Catalan front had been wiped out in one of the most powerful single assaults of the war.

Dispatches from Zaragoza said 4,000 Government militiamen had been killed and an equal number captured. Four thousand others would be unable to fight their way out a trap, the dispatches said.

The counter offensive was reported to have cleared the west bank of the Ebro river of Government troops from Maquinzena to Fayon, 10 miles to the south.

It was in this sector that the Government drive, launched July 24, carried the militiamen so far to the west in Catalonia that they threatened General Franco's vital rear guard town, Gaste, supply center of his entire Ebro battle line.

A Government communique admitted only the loss of some heights north of Fayon, declaring all other attacks on the northern flanks had been repulsed.

Insurgent dispatches said small streams, mountain paths and trenches were choked with Government dead while many hundreds of bodies floated down the Ebro. Many militiamen were machine-gunned by low-sweeping insurgent planes as they attempted to swim the broad river.

THREE WRECKS ARE REPORTED

One in Greenville and Two Elsewhere In County Sunday

One automobile wreck in Greenville and two collisions elsewhere in the county yesterday left several persons injured, not critical.

Marvin Tyson of Farmville, route one, and Will McCarn, Pitt county Negro, drivers of the cars involved in a wreck one mile from Fountain on the Tarboro road about 3 a. m. yesterday, were arrested on charges of reckless driving.

According to Patrolman H. B. Smith, who made an investigation, McCarn pulled out from a side road and ran into the rear of Tyson's automobile. The McCarn car turned over and caught fire.

Bruce Hagen, riding with Tyson, suffered a broken leg in the wreck and was taken to a Kinston hospital.

Yesterday afternoon Benjamin Wynne of Williamston and James Andrew Adams, Negro of Parmelee, were involved in an accident on a dirt road near Station mill on the Bethel highway.

Corporal L. L. Jackson, of the State Highway Patrol, who made investigation, said no one was injured and no arrest was made. Both cars were badly damaged.

The accident in Greenville was between a truck operated by John Vines, local Negro, and an automobile driven by L. R. Gooch of Henderson. City police investigated at the collision, which occurred at the intersection of Fourth and Elizabeth streets.

Two Henderson men riding with Gooch were injured, but not seriously. R. A. South erland sustained a broken rib and B. R. Hester received body bruises. Both men were taken to the hospital, but soon were released. S. S. Stevenson, also of Henderson, and the driver of the car escaped without injury.

Keynoter Declares Federation Facing Greatest Task

Wilmington, Aug. 8.—(AP)—Keynoting the opening session of the 32nd annual convention of the North Carolina Federation of Labor here this morning, Paul J. Aymon of Atlanta, representative of the American Federation of Labor, said to the approximately 200 delegates that the organization "has the greatest job in its history in preserving the democratic principles of our country."

Making a direct hit at "John L. Lewis and his gang" and "dean of labor organizers in the South", Aymon urged harmony in the ranks of labor in North Carolina. Stating the CIO was the exponent of minority rule, Aymon commended William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, for his stand on majority rule among labor.

Outlining the work of the labor organizers in the Federation, he urged the organizers to go back to their homes and harmonize the workers and work for a greater cooperation among the ranks of the State federation.

President C. A. Fink of Spencer presided at the morning session.

Gov. Chandler Concedes Nomination To FDR Stalwart

LOSER PLEDGES ACTIVE SUPPORT

On Basis of Returns, Barkley Will Be Opposed for Senate By Republican Haswell

Frankfort, Ky., Aug. 9.—(AP)—Governor A. B. Chandler today conceded the senatorial nomination to Senator Alben Barkley.

In a congratulatory telegram to Barkley, the Governor said, "I have no excuses, alibis or regrets."

Chandler promised Barkley his "active" support in the November general election.

Louisville, Ky., Aug. 8.—(AP)—Kentucky resumed counting ballots in Saturday's primary today with Senate Majority Leader Barkley holding a decisive lead over Gov. A. B. Chandler for renomination.

Returns from 3,336 of the state's 4,313 precincts gave 225,045 votes for Barkley and 186,780 for Chandler.

Five Democratic and one Republican representatives were leading in their races. Three others, all Democrats, were without opposition.

On the basis of returns, Barkley will be opposed for election in November by John Haswell, an attorney who apparently won the Republican nomination.

Gives Information On Georgia Mart

K. W. Cobb, supervisor of the Greenville Tobacco market, today revealed that he had received information from Frank Park, assistant supervisor on the Greenville market who at present is serving as supervisor of the Tifton, Ga., market, as to prices being paid.

According to Mr. Park Tifton last week sold 4,265,310 pounds of tobacco for $1,061,813.51, or an average of $24.87 per hundred pounds.

He declared that total sales there last week amounted to 5,939,752 pounds and brought a general season's average of $25.82. The figures show, as is generally known here, that prices on the Georgia market's usually drop off after the first day.

Mr. Park further advised Mr. Cobb that approximately half of the Georgia crop already had been sold.

BOSTON FETES DARING FLIER

Douglas Corrigan 'Flat Broke' on Visit 7 Years Ago

Boston, Aug. 8.—(AP)—His Irish eyes smiling, Douglas Corrigan today dropped in on the city he visited seven years ago "flat broke"—this time to receive the acclaim of thousands for the courage that took him across the Atlantic on a "wrong way" flight.

From New York, where he won the hearts of Gothamites, he came here aboard a dry airliner, a far cry from the ancient $900 "crate" in which he winged his way to Ireland, the land of his forefathers by "mistake."

The "luck of the Irish" brought Boston a perfect day for the seldom, if ever, equalled reception for the daring young man of the flying machine, and the airliner's compass, unlike the one Doug would have believed was responsible for his "error," kept the big ship true to her course.

Smallest Cotton Crop Since 1935 Predicted

Federal Crop Board Forecasts Yield Of 11,988,000 Bales

Washington, Aug. 8.—(AP)—The Federal Crop Reporting Board forecast today an 11,988,000 bale cotton crop for 1938, an estimated 6,958,000 bales below last year's production and smaller than any crop since 1935.

The AAA awaited price reaction from the estimates to determine whether loans will be mandatory under the new farm act.

A loan program is required to be established under the law if the average price on the principal markets falls below 52 per cent of par.

It was revealed that seven gallons of liquor were found on the premises of the negroes. All were indicted under one warrant.

As the session began there was that something unexpected "will" boogie up—that someone will introduce a bill to abolish the absentee ballot, for example, and get support enough to cause trouble and delay.

SPECIAL TERM WORK LIMITED

Move Consider Election Law Reforms Is Defeated

Raleigh, Aug. 8.—(AP)—Administration forces over-rode opposition today as the special session of the General Assembly convened and secured passage in both houses of a resolution limiting business to that proscribed by the Governor.

The Senate, on an oral vote, approved the resolution after once rejecting it by a one-vote margin, after the expressed desire of members to do something about absentee voting laws.

The heated eight district congressional contest, in which the apparent nomination of W. C. Burgin of Lexington is being contested by C. B. Deane of Rockingham on the grounds that irregular absentee votes were cast in Davidson county was injected by Senator L. A.

Chief Executive Also Requests Passage of Measure to Enable Sub-Divisions to Participate in Program; Recommends $75,000 be Appropriated So State Can Take Part in World's Fair

Raleigh, Aug. 9.—(AP)—Governor Hoey asked the special session of the General Assembly today to authorize issuance of $4,620,000 in state bonds so that PWA funds may be secured for two new state office buildings here and to enable state institutions to get new facilities in a building program approximating $8,750,000.

The Governor also requested passage of a measure to enable municipalities, counties and sanitary districts to issue revenue bonds to enable participation in the PWA program.

A surprise was a recommendation that the special session also consider participation by the state in the 1939 New York World's Fair and appropriate $75,000 for that purpose.

The Governor personally delivered his 1,400-word message shortly after the legislature had convened in extraordinary session at noon. Normally, members of the legislature meet only once during their two-year term, but today's was the third meeting for the solons elected in 1936.

Hoey pointed out that the Budget Commission recommended only buildings at state institutions or here be provided for from bond sales. He said proposed structures would fill "pressing needs."

At Raleigh, the Governor asked $692,000 for a Department of Justice building; $200,000 for a building on (Continued on page six)

Building Continues In Present Month

An apparent building boom for the month of August came into view last week when two building permits and a repair permit amounted to $2,100.

One of the building permits was for the construction of a two-story frame dwelling at an estimated cost of $1,600. The other was for making an additional room to a home here at an estimated cost of $400. The repair permit amounted to $100.

Building has shown a decided increase this year over previous years.

Garden Notes
August is the month in which we lay the foundation for our fall garden. During this month the following vegetables can be planted: Spinach, kale, turnips, and other salads or greens. Seed of early cabbage and head lettuce can be put in.

We should make another planting of snap beans and in the tidewater section Bush Lima beans, carrots and sweet corn can be safely planted the first of the month. Another crop of beets can also be grown.

Big Boston or White Boston varieties of lettuce will be best for fall planting.

Those who are interested in trying fall Irish potatoes should use either Bliss or Cobbles. If seed are too expensive and some small seed of the spring crop are available, these

BRIEF REFLECTIONS
Just The News You Are Looking For

Today has been a warm number. Regular meeting of Hope Fire Company tonight.

A phone has been placed in the residence of F. G. Whaley in South Greenville.

On the streets is not the proper place for melon rinds to be placed, but people will throw them out regardless of looks or health.

The looks of the county would be greatly improved if the weeds were cut down. Some work of the kind would also help the streets.

The tobacco market began its second week of the season with light breaks. The farmers are too busy curing to get much of their tobacco ready for market. Those who are coming in with it are getting high prices.

Opera House
Work is progressing rapidly on the opera house being built by Mr. J. J. Perkins on Fourth street. The building is 50x100 feet and the auditorium will be 50x80 feet. It is expected to be completed by the first of October.

should produce a fair crop under favorable weather conditions if the seed are exposed and greened in the open shade for about two or three weeks before planting. It is best to plant the whole potato.

Most vegetables must be grown rapidly if high quality is to be produced. Since growing conditions are not always as favorable in the summer as they are in the spring, be sure and keep the garden in a good state of cultivation and the plants well fertilized. A side application of nitrate to the leafy vegetables particularly is quite beneficial.

Remember the more insects you kill during the fall the less there will be to live over the winter and attack your spring garden. Stay right in behind the bean beetle. He can be controlled if thoroughly dusted with Rotenone dust. Be sure to get this dust on the under side of the leaves where the larva are feeding. Rotenone is not poison to animals or humans and can be used liberally on all vegetables. It kills the insect by coming in contact with it or if eaten. A liberal application to collards will materially check the Harlequin cabbage bug. The young bugs are rather easily killed by the dust but the older ones will probably have to be hand picked and dropped in a can of kerosene.

Council Picnic.
The Home Demonstration Council members will have a picnic for their families at the Farmville Swimming Pool Wednesday, August 10, at 6 p. m. Come and enjoy the evening. Bring a basket for your family.

To Present Musical Comedy Here.
The Pine State Playboys, novelty entertainers, who play twice daily over Kingston radio station WFTC, at 9 o'clock in the morning at one o'clock at lunch, will present a musical comedy at the high school auditorium on Thursday evening, August 11, at eight o'clock.

Just to hear Willie, the pianist, alone is worth your attention. These boys have all had training in their special fields and are accomplished performers.

Home Beautification leaders will have charge of programs on "Mail Boxes" and "Pools" in August. In most cases they have planned to have a mail carrier give the government regulations for mail boxes and tell how the mail is collected, assembled and distributed. Women who have successful hly pools are being asked to tell how their pools were made and suggest improvements they might have made. The Home Beautification leaders will give suggestions for beautifying mail boxes and locating and beautifying the pools. You are invited.

Garden Notes
August is the month in which we lay the foundation for our fall garden. During this month the following vegetables can be planted: Spinach, kale, turnips, and other salads or greens. Seed of early cabbage and head lettuce can be put in.

We should make another planting of snap beans and in the tidewater section Bush Lima beans, carrots and sweet corn can be safely planted the first of the month. Another crop of beets can also be grown.

Big Boston or White Boston varieties of lettuce will be best for fall planting.

Those who are interested in trying fall Irish potatoes should use either Bliss or Cobbles. If seed are too expensive and some small seed of the spring crop are available, these

Hollywood Sights And Sounds

Hollywood—I've just witnessed Frank Lloyd's biggest moment in nine weeks. I saw him shoot the final scene of "If I Were King."

The producer-director sat beside the camera. At the other side stood Ronald Colman, a bearded Francis Vinton in a comfortable modern suit. Before the camera stood Frances Dee, dark hair flowing, white robes flowing—a medieval French princess ready for a close-up.

"I know," said Frances, "what would make them fight."
"What?" said Colman's off-stage voice.

"They would fight if they were hungry—those fat generals and their men, forever stuffing themselves with food and drink. Pigs all of them!"

That was all. "If I Were King" was finished, slightly under schedule. There were goodbyes and thank-yous all around. Colman vanished. So did Princess Dee—the latter, I learned, having just earned $550 for those two speeches. Colman earned considerably more for his one word. But you ought to see them earn it on a full day.

"I don't know when I've been so glad to see a picture finished," Lloyd volunteered en route to the commissary for lunch. "And I don't know when I've been so tired."

There were Lloyd, his young associate producer Lou Smith; Lance Heath, who gets depressed when he's assigned to other units than Lloyd's and myself. All of us knew Lloyd, blue-eyed, black-browed Scotsman, had gone ahead with the picture when he should have been in bed. Had a bad leg injury several weeks back. So all of us felt sorry for him—until he began on his vacation plans. Little Norwegian boat, 28 days at sea, reading, sleeping, eating, resting. Sympathy? We were green-eyed.

But he'll have to stay here on the picture until September. I gave a little so-sorry talk.

"Not at all," Frank insisted. "The hard part's finished. No more worrying about people getting hurt in sword play and mob scenes. No more tension, all of us straining to get each scene right. All we have left now is to cut it, put it together, synchronize the music—and then take it somewhere for the sneak preview. That's the night I'm going to tear my fingernails out, while the audience makes up its mind!"

"Lou's been handing me a lot of scripts to read, but I don't trust myself when I'm this tired. Temptation to pick an easy one is too great. And the easy ones don't often make the best ones."

I asked Lloyd why he didn't try a modern story for a change after "Wells Fargo," "Maid of Salem," "Mutiny on the Bounty" and this.

"I'd like nothing better," he replied with enthusiasm, "but I can't find a good one. Trouble with most is the women. Women are being written as they fancy themselves—in rolls in business, law, medicine. I think what women want in pictures is more chivalry and gallantry. There are too many modern stories in which the hero expresses devotion by soaking his lady in the paw. That's why I think 'If I Were King' is going to meet a demand—for real romance."

So you see, ladies, it's up to you

Beginning An Explosive Serial Of The French Riviera

"My dear young lady, neither of us know you. And it's not a case of defective memory, for you're much too pretty to forget."

THE CLOUDED MOON By MAX SALTmarsh

Chapter One
A Riviera Blonde

"ARCHIE," said Hugo Stern suddenly, "a blonde over there has her eye on you."
I sighed. "Do you mind," I asked patiently, "being a trifle more explicit? This place is full of blondes."
"The one I mean is sitting thirty degrees right, at the corner table. Don't look round. She may be some old flame you'd rather not rekindle, or she may merely have a weakness for the Tarzan type of male, but she's definitely got her eye on you, and if you catch it she'll take it as an invitation."

"Not when she gets a clear sight of my face," I retorted, and I turned, ignoring his protest, balancing my gin fizz precariously on the arm of my chair and surveying the landscape. It was even as I had said. Far as the eye could reach, the open air terrace of the Carlton was coated with nothing but blondes ranging from the ashy fairness of Scandinavia, through the varying synthetic shades of peroxide, to the ripe corn-color of the Germans.

Men were there too, swarthy as nature or sun-tan had made them and dressed for the most part in the blue cotton shirt and trousers of the fishermen whose native coast they had invaded, but they were merely the necessary background to the ladies they escorted and those ladies were the very perfume essence of the Côte d'Azur. Like a gaudy flower, they sat there, laughing, chattering, drinking—blondes in bathing suits, in bright-colored trousers, in gaily patterned beach-robots.

To right and left of us towered the great white luxury hotels of the Cannes Croisette; the Malmaison, the Miramar, the Martinez; in front stretched the still whiter stucco balustrade of the terrace, and beyond that lay the blue Mediterranean, crowned with the shimmering, hazy vault of the midday August sky.

The blonde in question was sitting alone, at a small table in the shadow of a clipped bay tree, sipping a pinkish, frothy drink from a tall glass; a slender, long-limbed creature, dressed in white shorts and shirt, with a crimson sash folded about her slim waist, and a red chiffon handkerchief knotted on her crisp golden curls. The whole effect of her was of youth and grace and ease—only her eyes dark and brooding, gave her the picture; and those eyes, as Hugo had said, were fixed intently on me.

As I caught her gaze she smiled suddenly, with a flash of white teeth, and lifted a hand in greeting, but I looked away hurriedly. I was in Cannes for a bare couple of days, and that only to see Hugo and I had no mind for any feminine entanglements that would cut short my time with him.

"I don't know her," I assured him, but he shook his head mournfully.

"You shouldn't have looked her way. There you are, she's coming over now and why should I lose my chance for a cocktail and lunch before you know where you are? I know these Riviera blondes."

"Not lunch," I retorted, "but she can have her cocktail. She may be a gold-digger," I added thoughtfully, "but she's extraordinarily easy to look at."
Hugo shook his head again. "Cut out the cocktail too," he said firmly. "She may be easy to look at, but I haven't seen you these two years and why should I lose my pleasure to give a girl a free drink? You leave me to handle her."

Hard-Hearted
I FELT that he was being unnecessarily hard-hearted, but I knew well, at the same time, that he had plenty of excuse. The French Riviera these days is definite—and I had just about decided that she must be an artist's model who had learned her English from some American painter when I found that, for the second time Hugo was answering for me.

"Childhood Friends"

"NO, NO," said he. He leaned his brawny, sun-tanned arms on the table, and now the good-natured smile was fading, hardening into something cold and implacable. "You'll have to forgive us, mademoiselle, but you're barking up the wrong tree."

She caught her breath sharply, fiercely indignant, and then suddenly the shadowed look left her eyes and they became as dancing and mischievous as a little girl's. "Ladies don't bark up trees, she retorted. "They sit on; branch waiting to be barked at."

Hugo shouted with laughter at that. "Young woman, you win. It's definitely established that we're childhood friends. Let's drink to our former meeting—and our next."

He hailed a passing waiter and invited her order, and she laughed back at him, gay now and carefree. "Let's see, where was it we saw each other last?" she said. "Was it Paris? Or Deauville? Or Le Touquet?"

And then suddenly, even as I watched her, a dreadful change came over her face. Her glance had strayed over my shoulder, and now for an instant it remained transfixed. The dark eyes widened staring and haunted, the warm color drained from her cheeks. She gasped, and put her hand to her heart.

"I'm sorry," she said, very low. "I can't wait for the drink I must go. Tell me—she said a hand swiftly on my arm—"you're staying here? What's your name?"

"Archibald Lumsden," I told her. "Yes, I'll be here for a day or two, but what's the trouble? Why can't you wait?"

"It's nothing," she answered but even as she spoke, her eyes were roving this way and that like a hunted animal. She repeated my name softly, under her breath, as if memorizing it, and stood up. "Thank you," she said. "You've been—kind I won't forget it."

The golden curls and the rufous crimson turban vanished, and I turned to Hugo.

"And that's that," I commented rather ruefully. "What do you make of her? I presume on closer inspection she wasn't so taken with our looks."

He shook his head, pulling thoughtfully at his aged brier. "It wasn't that," he said at last, "but it was the oddest thing I ever saw. She spotted something or somebody that she didn't like, and quit in a hurry, but what it was I've no idea, and what to make of her I can't tell. Did you notice the queer accent? Half of it was put on, I'll swear."

"The French half was genuine enough," said I.

He shook his head again. "No," he said decidedly. "It was the French half that was fake, and besides, did you ever see a Frenchwoman built like that? Those long slender limbs, the delicate articulation of the feet and hands? No, no, my young friend, they don't breed 'em like that this side of the Channel. It's my job to notice such things, and you can take my word for it, she was an American, and finely bred at that, pretending to a nationality she didn't own, and playing a game she didn't know. And what's more—" He hesitated, and his eyes, somber now and worried, met mine. "And what's more," he finished, "she was desperately afraid."

SUIT STARTED BY PEPSI-COLA

Holds the Coca-Cola Trademark Secured Through Fraud

New York, Aug. 9.—Suit was filed in the Supreme Court of Queens county today by the Pepsi-Cola Company, asking for a restraining order to enjoin the Coca-Cola Company from interfering with the Pepsi-Cola Company, its subsidiaries and licensees throughout the United States.

Simultaneously with the filing of this bill of complaint against the Coca-Cola Company, a petition has been filed in the U. S. Patent office in Washington, D. C., by the Pepsi-Cola Company attacking the validity of the Coca-Cola trade-mark. It is claimed that the trade-mark was obtained "through untruthful and fraudulent statements made in the application for trade-mark registration."

The petition further states that the names "Coca" and "Cola" are both descriptive names, are public property, and therefore cannot be used exclusively by the Coca-Cola Company.

The bill of complaint alleges that the Pepsi-Cola trade-mark has been in existence and in continuous use for more than 35 years; and that during all that period Pepsi-Cola has been sold side by side in competition with Coca-Cola; and that its rights have never been challenged in the United States by anyone during this entire period.

During the past several years, the Pepsi-Cola Company has been active in sales and advertising, and as a result distribution has been obtained not only throughout the U. S., but throughout a considerable part of the world.

The bill of complaint further alleges that the Pepsi-Cola Company, its subsidiaries, affiliates and licensees, have an investment in excess of $25,000,000; and that in the calendar year has spent in newspaper advertising alone in excess of one million dollars.

The Pepsi-Cola Company alleges that "in the Metropolitan District of New York and throughout many other places the sales of bottled Pepsi-Cola far exceed the sales of bottled Coca-Cola; and that as a result the Coca-Cola Company has resorted to illegal and fraudulent practices in an effort to stifle this competition and injure the good will of the Pepsi-Cola Company, destroy its business and that of its subsidiaries, affiliates and licensees, and thus create for itself a monopoly of the soft drink beverage business, especially in the Cola field."

Efforts are being made "to buy out or intimidate all competitors of Coca-Cola in order to create a monopoly" the suit contends.

IT'S ODD But It's Science

By HOWARD W. BLAKESLEE

AP Science Editor
New York—An industrial malingeringer who fakes stiff joints in order to collect compensation, can fool doctors, but he can't fool geometry.

The geometry snare is explained to the American Medical Association by Charles Murray Gratz, M.D., of Columbia University. The only tools are a yardstick, paper pencil, and grammar school skill in measuring angles.

He has the patient lie down, both legs stiff, one flat on the table, the other lifted in the air. In this position the legs form a triangle. The distance between the two feet, while one is above the other, is the base.

The angles the legs respectively form with this base give the length of each leg.

What the malingeringer can't do, under this test, is to shorten his leg twice in succession to exactly the same length. The angles are more accurate than his powers of deception.

Likewise a stiff elbow or shoulder is found by measuring the angle which a person is able to make drawing his hand upward behind his back. If he is faking he fails to repeat exactly, but the real stiff joint repeats.

NATIONAL ADVERTISING REPRESENTATIVES Thomas F. Clark Co., Inc., New York, Chicago, Indianapolis, Philadelphia, Kansas City, Richmond

Washington Daybook

By Preston Grover

Washington—A House committee is resuming the perennial hunt for Nazi, fascist, communist and other subversive influences. Rep. Martin Dies of Texas, master of the hunt, hopes to conduct the chase in a dignified and conclusive manner, with as few headlines as possible.

Hunting subversive influences has always been a great sport in Washington, although he would be a foolish lout who thought the huntmen were not serious about it.

Perhaps the most famous recent hunt was conducted by Rep. Hamilton Fish of New York. For days on end Mr. Fish had the country's headlines to himself as he conducted, in the pre-Roosevelt days, a chase of communists. That occurred in the days when this country had not formally recognized Russia and was under no restraints to the police. Besides, the Russian government at that time (and some will say yet), was committed to the international revolution.

Mr. Fish was not satisfied with hunting communists in this country but went to Russia with the idea of sort of "bringing one back alive." He brought back a live issue that has served as the subject of many congressional speeches by the tall congressman.

Remember General Butler? Undoubtedly the most persistent hunter of subversive influences in the country is Representative Dickstein of New York. In 1934 he began an investigation that filled two large volumes of printed testimony. Since then he has filled many pages of the Congressional Record.

At one time Representative Dickstein had General Smedley D. Butler as a witness to tell a story of proposals made to him that he head an organization of veterans designed to set up a "fascist" type of government in the United States. Butler insisted he was interested in maintaining a democracy, and would have nothing to do with it.

Another time one of Mr. Dickstein's witnesses bled fire on him. The representative was questioning Ernest Schmitz, representative in America of the German tourist offices. It had been the practice of the German tourist lines and tourist services to provide free trips to Germany for artists, newspaper men, and lecturers who, they hoped, would see the "true picture" of the new Germany.

But Mr. Schmitz testified that Mr. Dickstein, as chairman of the House immigration committee, also had asked for a free ticket.

Mr. Dickstein said, however, that he never got a free trip, but paid $500 for it.

"I have got a different statement from the manager of the North German Lloyd, who tells me you got a high-class accommodation at minimum rates for it," Mr. Schmitz said.

"I want to tell you the accommodation was not so good," Mr. Dickstein retorted.

Dickstein Out, Dies In Mr. Dickstein sought to head the current "lan" investigation but the House leadership side-stepped him, left him off the committee entirely and put Representative Dies at the top.

Instead of inviting incidents such as the Butler affair, Dies plans to attempt to measure the "true weight" of such movements as communism, nazism and fascism. He seems to doubt whether that has been done by previous inquiries. As side issues he may:

- 1—Investigate whether communism is responsible for the labor unrest in the automobile industry. 2—Investigate whether there is enough anti-labor "vigilantism" to constitute a subversive influence.

SHORT SHOTS

By HENRY AVERILL

Raleigh, Aug. 8.—For pure persistence there's no group like opponents of North Carolina's Sales Tax.

Ever since 1933, the General Assembly has knocked them down every time they get up, but they're still in there swinging. Gluttons for punishment, we'd say.

Probing the thesis, regard the case of Paul Leonard, of the Free-pardon us, it's Fair Tax Association. He's had more than five years to test the Constitutionality of the law, but has just got round to doing so by way of opening a store in Winston-Salem and refusing to pay the tax.

Judging from news reports that the assessment against him—presumably for a full month's business—was only $3.12 there is no indication that the public has been rushing to patronize the would-be martyr either to help him or to save the tax. Paul's turnover, it would seem, was something more than $100 gross for a month.

But Mr. Leonard isn't by himself in his efforts. Mayor Thomas E. Cooper of Wilmington wants a tax-free mule whether he wants forty acres or not. Mayor Tom is seeking to lift the levy off the long eared animals as president of the N. C. Mule Dealers Association, not as an individual.

Then there was the Farm and Home Week meeting of farmers here. The tillers of the soil were much more sweeping in their demands than Mayor Tom and his associated mule skinner. The F. and H. group demanded loudly that all farm supplies of a strictly agricultural nature, feeds, implements, etc., be exempt from the obnoxious tax.

In general, the attacks on the measure as a whole, however, have broken down completely, and the war that is now raging is something on the order of the guerrilla tactics of the Chinese in their war with the Japs.

Work of the Oral Hygiene Division of the North Carolina State Board of Health will be on display at the annual meeting of the Southern California Dental Association at Coronado, September 1 to 16, according to Dr. Ernest A. Branch.

Commissioner of Revenue A. J. Maxwell undoubtedly is a complete convert to the theory that highway funds should not be diverted to other uses. Until recently he had been generally regarded as the chief strategist of the diversion forces.

Speaking to the Automobile Dealers Convention at Greensboro today he said, after enumerating many needed highway improvements:

"These and other demands for highway improvement ought to remove any further question of diversion of gasoline and motor vehicle taxes. There is imperative need for all this revenue on the highways, and it may be that we should temporarily slow down the rate of reduction of highway debt until these necessary improvements can be made. The necessity is apparent, and traffic is constantly and rapidly increasing."

Speaking of Mr. Maxwell, those who are boosting him for the 1940 gubernatorial nomination, say they will base their claims to preference for the Revenue Commissioner on the fact of his long service to the state.

They will point out that if ever a man deserved "promotion" because of his wide knowledge and many achievements in state affairs, Mr. Maxwell is the man.

The legislature meeting today has only one member widely mentioned as likely to be a 1940 governor candidate. The one is Lee Gravelly, Senator from Nash county, who has been boosted in many quarters.

LOVE ON THE RANGE

BY NELSON C. BYE

Sudden Death

THIS, Ankrum told himself, as in the darkness he turned back toward the fireplace, was the very thing he had ridden into this country to avoid—murder, battle and sudden death. Yet he had found them even as he knew he would. Reaching above the mantel for a rifle it came to him that a man cannot escape his destiny.

Not that it mattered, he told himself. Since Lee Trone had flung those words at him across this room and turned her back, he no longer cared. He'd deserved the words she'd used on him, and more. His censure was for himself.

The rifle was a repeater. He examined it and found the magazine full. His wide lips pulled downward grimly as he crossed the moonlit floor and crouched beneath a window. A glance across his shoulder showed him Claydell at another; there was the glint of a six gun in the rancher's hand.

With the barrel of his rifle, Ankrum knocked the glass from the lower shelf. Jerking his hat-brim low, he peered out across the yard. Some two hundred yards away a pair of touring cars were drawn up in a loose V, its apex pointing toward the house. Bursts of yellow flame blossomed magically in the darkness of space beneath.

"Reckon they're all behind those cars?"

"I doubt it," Claydell answered. "They got into position mighty quick, but not so quick I didn't see two shadows flittin' away—one to either side. Those two will flank my men and drive 'em into the house. You wait 'n' see. Ratchford savvies this Indian game better'n any gent I ever met. We'll have our work cut out for us."

"How many men you got out here?"

"Let's see... five. Countin' Bandera."

"How many men you figure there is with Ratchford?"

"I'd say eight or ten, anyway."

"Didn't you cut your string pretty short?" Ankrum's tone held a note of mockery.

"You're thinkin' I was kind of tight on men. Well, I wasn't at all sure Ratchford was plannin' to strike to-night. I only brought my bunch to be on the safe side. I don't see now how it is Ratchford's raidin' here, 'stead of over at my place. He knows he'll have to smash me first."

"He was comin' here for me," Ankrum explained, and showed his rifle across the sill. "Still, you posted your men outside with orders to open up as soon as Ratchford showed. How come you did that if you weren't expectin' him?"

"I told you—I was figurin' to play safe. If Ratchford came I was ready for him. If he didn't, there wasn't any harm done in bein' ready." Claydell leaned closer to his window, peering out into the drifting shadows. "I wish they'd get out into the open where we could pick 'em off."

"You needn't worry about Ratchford stickin' too close to shelter. He's in no mood for cautious fightin'. Right now he's feelin' meaner'n a new-sheared sheep."

"You talkin' to keep your courage up?" Claydell sneered. "If you ain't, then shu' up! I want to hear the music, I've tried for a good many years to maneuver Ratchford into pullin' something like this."

"Ratchford's land appeal to you, too?"

A Rush BUT at that moment a bullet knocked glass slivers from the upper sash of Ankrum's window. At that moment also, he sighted a forward-creeper figure edging houseward from the black shadow of the cars. He elevated his rifle's muzzle just a fraction. His finger squeezed the trigger—the trigger ceased all movement.

Ankrum cuddled his weapon's butt against his shoulder and waited for another target. "You wantin' Ratchford's land, too?" he repeated. "Must be damn valuable dirt in this country. What's in it, anyway—diamonds?"

"You wouldn't be doin' so much scoffin' if you knew what I know," Claydell answered enigmatically. "Trouble is with you, you don't use even the one brain you been equipped with."

Before Ankrum could find a sufficiently scathing rejoinder, a definite lull became apparent in the sound of cracking rifles. "Well, you were right for once, at any rate," he said. "This won't last much longer. They've driven your coyotes off."

"Not off," Claydell corrected. "Just inside. They'll be with us in a second."

The prescribed second had hardly passed when two men entered from the hall. Their faces, as they entered, were in shadow. Yet by their gear Ankrum picked out one for Bandera. He'd known the Mexican would not be hurt—the hills. Bandera swore when he recognized Ankrum by the moonlight that was streaming in the windows. The Mexican's companion said: "They got Tim. Ed an' Baldy sloped!" Claydell continued his watchful scrutiny of the yard. Abruptly Ankrum realized that someone was crouching at his side. With sidelong glance he attempted to determine who. What he saw brought his head full around. Anger marked his voice: "You can't stay out here! D'you want to get shot?" "I'll do as I please in this house," Lee Trone answered defiantly. "Kindly tend to your own business."

Ankrum scowled at her through the semi-gloom. Always, he was thinking, they had had to clash. His scowl grew blacker as he observed a gun in Lee's right hand. She was not looking at him now, but at something behind him. He saw her gun start up. Letting go the rifle he flashed a glance across his shoulder.

Across the room Bandera was crouched, one arm above his head. From something in his back-flung hand the moonlight struck silvery gleams. Ankrum hurried himself aside as that upraised hand snapped forward. With a chuckle a knife buried its point in the sill behind him as flame lanced out from Ankrum's hip, and from the gun in Lee Trone's hand.

Bandera spun, reeled sideways and crashed down across the table. Claydell's oath—as lost in the startled cry of Bandera's companion: "Quick! They're makin' a rush!"

Reconciliation THE man's warning had come too late to stem the tide of Ratchford's rush. The outer door bulged beneath the onslaught of a battering log. With a shrill scream of rending wood the door was torn from its hinges and smashed to the floor as Ratchford's wolves came surging in with blazing guns.

Ankrum's heart thudded crazily against his ribs, as brushing Lee behind him, he thumbed swift shots into the huddle of crowding men showing dimly in that open doorway. Shouting, cursing, Ratchford's crew came swarming in, and the moon-dappled murk was illumined by criss-cross stabbing streaks of flame.

Ankrum did not know his gun was empty, its pin useless brass, until a steady pummeling of his side caused him to lower a hand, into which Lee slipped a freshly-loaded pistol.

Then through the gloom a towering, rocklike form thrust up before him. There was no mistaking that bulging, burly figure.

"Tom Ratchford," Ankrum breathed, and whipped his weapon up. Yet even as his thumb released its hammer, he saw Ratchford's big shape lurch sideways—fall sprawling to the swift tripping hammer beat of Claydell's gun from the opposite window.

Drawing a deep breath, Ankrum looked down. A bar of moonlight poured liquid silver across Ratchford's heavy face; revealed his working lips as, stubbornly, the dying man strove to speak. Words came at last in a broken whisper: "Claydell... was after oil."

"Damn you to hell!" swore Claydell, and flame burst redly from his hip.

Ankrum's voice crossed the silence raggedly: "That was a dog's trick, Claydell."

Through the murk of smoke and shadow the rancher's tall, lank form stood stiff.

"Vow!" said Claydell, and his gun belched flame again.

A burning shock seared Ankrum's side, but he kept his feet. "Not good enough," he jeered. Claydell's hand was shaking now. Ankrum could hear the bullets shrill; could hear them chunk! into the wall behind him. He shot coldly from the hip—just once. Claydell crumpled, stretched motionless on the floor.

Then everything went black. Minutes later he opened his eyes to find his head pillowed on something soft. He turned his head a little, realized that it was resting in Lee Trone's lap. He tried to struggle up, only to find that her arms, clasped about him, would not let him rise.

Something hot and moist fell on his face. Tears! Lee Trone was crying!

"Why, ma'am—," he began, but she broke in, and there was unimaginable tenderness in the low, throat murmur with which she asked: "Oh, Abe—why did you make me love you so?"

A tremor ran through his body, the blood pumped furiously through his veins. "You—you don't—you can't mean—?"

"Of course," she said, smiling through her tears at his incoherence. "I've loved you all the time!"

Huey Long's Son Up To His Father's Tricks

Russell Long, Boy Orator

(By The AP Feature Service) Baton Rouge, La.—Huey Long's oldest son, Russell, 19, wants to follow in his father's footsteps—so he is not overlooking one thing, "political sagacity."

The energetic youngster is sure his father had plenty of that quality. He is going to be sure, he says, that he has it, too, before he takes a whirl in state politics.

Russell strikingly resembles the late senator in appearance, speech and manner—Huey's political friends call him "a chip off the old block." He admits he has political ambitions but says he'll wait until he's 25 before he makes his bid.

It was at the age of 25 that Russell's father, the Louisiana Kingfish, started his blazing political career as state railroad commissioner, later to become governor and then U. S. Senator before he was shot and killed at the capital here in 1935.

"My mother," Russell continued, "has often said Dad would have been impeached and ousted as governor if he had been elected the first time he ran in 1924."

Now A Senate Clerk "As it turned out he lost his first race as governor and won in 1928. When he was impeached by the House and faced trial in the Senate, he won out because, with a few more years' experience, he had the necessary political sagacity."

Russell knows every member of the political machine his father left in power in Louisiana. This summer as assistant clerk in the State Sen-spring, he won the presidency of the LSU student body. Some of his campaign stunts included having an airplane drop leaflets, hiring a swing band and sound trucks to lure crowds to mass meetings and serving free ice cream cones. He has another year of undergraduate work ahead of him at the university. After that he expects to put in three years studying law.

Greenies Whip Billies, 6-4 and 5-4 in Week-end Series

LOCALS SWEEP BILLIES SERIES

Late Rallies in Each Week-End Contest Brings Victory To Rube's Gang

The Greenies swept the week-end double-header with Snow Hill, but they did it with only one-run margins, and in both instances came from behind to push over the winning counters.

In Sunday's game at Third street park here the Greenies licked the Billies 6-4.

Freddie Caligiuri got off to a disheartening start when the visitors bumped him for three runs on a brief series of base hits coupled with errors and bad breaks. The Billies added another in the second inning on base hits, but that was all they could do the remainder of the game.

The game rocked along in easy fashion with Zschau, the Billies' lanky left-hander going good, until the fifth inning when, with two away and Caligiuri on base by virtue of a single, Birch Douglass tripled to deep right-center. Fred talked but Birch was left on third.

The locals put on a seventh inning rally—to tie the count. Smith was safe when Zschau messed up his infield tap. Caligiuri was safe on an error and Douglass cracked a one double to score Smith. Jenkins then hit a scorching single to center and Caligiuri and Douglass both scored.

The fans were well awake by this time and in the home half of the eighth they clamored for the winning marker. Heavener, first up, obliged by hitting a nice single. Christopher sought to sacrifice him to second, but after trying once he dropped a single into center which could have been caught but wasn't. Allen then doubled and Heavener counted. With Christopher on third the squeeze play was put on but Zschau pitched low to Smith and Christopher was out at the plate.

At this juncture the Snow Hill battery insisted that Smith had tried the bunt the low pitch. Umpire Kazben went so and Manager Preshead Walker joined in the protestations. What he said to Mr. Kazben caused the arbiter to chase Preshead from the game, following which play was resumed.

Saturday's Game
Snow Hill, Aug. 6.—Birch Douglass' two-run homer in the ninth inning broke up a follow-the-leader game and gave Greenville a 6-4 victory over Snow Hill Saturday.

Every time the Greenies scored, the Billies matched it in the home half. This happened three times in the third fourth and sixth innings, but then came Douglass' game winning blow in the ninth.

Allen and Smith filed out in the last inning. Skipper Rube Wilson singled. With the count and two and three Birch poled a homer over the left-center fence.

Heavener, with a double and two singles in four tries paced the Greenies. Felix Stirewalt, with a double and two singles in four turns, led the locals.

Snow Hill set some sort of a record by leaving 14 men on bases. The Greenies left five.

Bears Beat Snakes in Both Week-End Tilts

Tarboro, Aug. 8.—New Bern shelacked Tarboro 13-3, Sunday and moved into a "virtual tie" with the locals for top race in Coastal Plain League standings.

As a result of Sunday's contest, the clubs are even on a games basis—but Tarboro has a four-point advantage in per centage.

There were five home runs. Ed Black hit one in the first to put Tarboro ahead, but Mack's two-run drive gave the Bears an edge. Maynard's homer in the locals' second tied the score, but from then on it was New Bern's ball game. Black's second homer came in the sixth.

Most potent of the day's home runs was a drive by Benny Roth in the eighth. Ace Elliott, Tarboro's starting pitcher was relieved by Robinson in the eighth. Roth then greeted the new hurler by driving a three-run homer over the right-wall. Roth hit three home runs in a game Saturday.

Berry pitched the route for the Bears, and his only bad moments came when he threw those three home-run balls.

The largest crowd of the season saw the game.

City of Beaufort Hopes To Become Center For Study

Thriving Coastal Town Scene of Schools Which Have Created Mariner's Dream Campus Life

Reflector Bureau
Raleigh, Aug. 6.—Reports reaching here from Beaufort, down in Carteret county, are to the effect that the thriving coastal city is hopeful that within five years it will be the center of marine biology and botany study in the South.

All this because of its three sea-side summer schools which have created a mariner's pipe dream of college campus life.

Class sessions which rise and fall with the swell of the Gulf Stream. Lectures delivered knee-deep in mud; sketching groups working in the hustle and bustle of a fishing dock—these have been characteristic of the summer schools which have come to the sea. BARGAINS WITH STUDENTS
Omaha, Neb. —(AP)—It seemed perfectly logical in this day of labor bargaining that Dr. W. W. H. Thompson, psychology professor at the University of Omaha, agreed to "bargain collectively" with his students. Their plea was for postponement of a mid-term examination. Dr. Thompson set the day on which he would meet the students' agents.

Changes Are Made In Locals' Roster

Several changes have been made in the Greenies line-up as the season goes into the home stretch.

John (Whitey) Heavener of Gastonia, who obtained his release some time ago, has been placed under contract again. Harry Jenkins, Jr. of Gastonia, a third-sacker, and Bob Forbes of Greenville, relief hurler, are the most recent new additions to the club.

Kerba, who has been a "utility" man for the club for some time, has been released. Dove, member of the locals' hurling staff, also has been released.

N. Y. Stock Market

New York, Aug. 8.—(AP)—Renewal of war fears in conjunction with fresh Russo-Japanese fighting in the Far East, together with further weakness of major commodities, sapped the stock market stamina today and leading issues dipped fractions to around two points at the worst.

Subsequent attempts at a rally were too feeble to attract much support and the slow downward drift continued until just before the close when extreme losses were rescued in many cases.

Transfers approximated 900,000 shares.

Vocational Teachers Talk Fair Exhibits

The Pitt-Lenoir-Onslow group of Agriculture teachers met last week for the purpose of discussing displays and exhibits for fairs and windows. Those taking part in the program were Mr. Britt of Stokes, Mr. Mobley of Winterville, and Mr. Herring of Contentnea. Some of the other members gave their views on the matter also.

The same group met at Ayden again on Friday to work out lesson plans and other teaching aids to be used this winter. The group met again today to finish this work.

ity, or about 8.27 cents a pound on the basis of the present parity figure of 15.9 cents a pound.

The price on the principal markets averaged 8.49 cents Saturday, compared with 8.63 a week earlier. After the usual recess while awaiting the report today, December contracts reopened on the New York cotton exchange at 8.34 cents, compared with the day's opening of 8.44.

The AAA has authority to fix the cotton loan rate, if a loan becomes necessary, between about 8.27 and 11.92 cents a pound.

The crop reporting board estimate of average yield for 1938 was 217.9 pounds an acre, 49 pounds less than 1937.

The estimate was based on the condition of the crop August 1, which was 78 per cent of a normal, and on the area in cultivation July 1, less the 10-year average abandonment, which was estimated at 26,347,000 acres.

The condition of the crop August 1, the indicated acre-yield and the indicated total production, by states, includes: North Carolina 68; 240, and 453,000.

Other developments included: The National Emergency Council will make public its report on economic conditions in the South Wednesday, the day before President Roosevelt makes two addresses in Georgia.

The timing of the report left little doubt that the survey of what the President has called the nation's "number one economic problem" was strategically important to the administration's campaign to win over the entire South to Roosevelt policies.

pected to be heavy," the foreign office said.

The statement came shortly after one from the war office declaring there had been no hand-to-hand fighting during the week and denying reports from Moscow that Changkufeng had been recaptured by the Soviets.

Moscow, Aug. 9.—(AP)—Soviet Russia has warned Japan of more determined military action to repel attacks, advised her to weigh carefully the dangers of a real war, and laid down the terms upon which Russia is prepared to accept a truce in the Siberian frontier "incident."

"The time has come to terminate these endless 'incidents,'" Foreign Minister Maxim Litvinoff told the Japanese Ambassador, M. Shigemitsu.

Litvinoff said a new border clash had occurred near Suifengho, 250 miles north of Changkufeng.

Martin Davidson, Burgin also contends there were irregularities in Richmond county absentee votes.

The House members adopted the "gag" resolution after Representative Walter Murphy of Rowan spoke in opposition. There was a good oral vote in opposition, but Speaker Cherry ruled the "ayes" had it.

Senator James B. L. Mecklenburg was elected president pro tem of the Senate to succeed A. Hall Johnston of Buncombe, who resigned when he was appointed a superior court judge.

ulate any votes.

"We are merely finding the facts and are making no counts," the chairman said. "The first information the members of the board will have about who won will be after the tabulation is made in Raleigh. I haven't the slightest idea which way the county will go and I believe no other member of the board has either."

The board also has under advisement charges of election irregularities in the fourth and sixth senatorial races and in the Avery county sheriff's race. Lucas said decisions on these matters also would be made at Raleigh tomorrow.

Japan gave notice of withdrawal from the League of Nations March 27, 1933, and ceased to be a member on March 26, 1935.
