LIBERAL PARTY TO BE SOUGHT BY ROOSEVELT

Pledges Personal Effort in Maryland Address

PRaises RECORD OF TYDINGS' FOE

Although Mention Of Names is Avoided, Chief Executive Supports Rep. Lewis

Denton, Md., Sept. 5.—(AP)—President Roosevelt pledged his personal effort "to try to keep" the Democratic party "liberal" in an address today praising the legislative record of the New Deal's senatorial candidate in Maryland, Representative David J. Lewis.

By name, Mr. Roosevelt mentioned in his prepared address neither Lewis nor Sen. Millard Tydings, whom the White House had marked for defeat in the Democratic party.

But the President's praise of Lewis was unmistakable, while many hearers recalling that Mr. Roosevelt once said that Tydings "wants to run with the Roosevelt prestige and the money of his conservative Republican friends, both on his side," interpreted these words as directed at the Senator.

"Any man, any political party, has a right to be honestly one or the other 'conservative or liberal.' But the nation can not stand for the confusion of having him pretend to be one and act like the other."

The President spoke to Eastern Shore farmers gathered with their families in a county fair atmosphere on and about the courthouse lawn. They had brought picnic lunches, drank soda pops and had snapshots taken by photographers while they waited for the President and Lewis to show up the courthouse.

Mr. Roosevelt's Labor Day speech was delivered after an automobile drive from Crisfield, where he landed from an overnight cruise on his yacht. He paused at Salisbury to say that the Eastern Shore had given him a "wonderful reception."

The President indirectly noted the contention in some campaign advertisements by Tydings' supporters that his visit constituted an "invasion" of the state. In this connection he remarked that "for two reasons" he had accepted the invitation of Representative T. A. Goldsborough, Eastern Shore Congressman, to make the visit.

"The first reason," he said, "is to give you and me a chance to re-establish a fact which we thought long ago was thoroughly established by the constitution, that in the free state of Maryland the flag, the constitution and the President are still as welcome as in all the other 47 states of the Union."

"The second and the original reason for my coming here is also related to the union of this Union. Unthinking people may believe that the first Monday in September, Labor Day, is set aside in special honor of those who work at a trade in mills and factories, and railroads and mines. That is a narrow interpretation, for this day belongs just as much to those who work with head and hands on farms."

"America has always had and America still has a small minority that assumes that there are enough good things to go around to give that minority all its wants and at the same time to give the rest of America, the overwhelming majority of Americans humane and modern standard of living. Today above all else that minority is trying to drive a wedge between the farmers on the one hand and their relatives and their logical partners in the cities on the other."

Dewey Preparing To End Testimony

Hines Expected to Take Stand If Defense Motion for Directed Verdict of Acquittal Denied

New York, Sept. 5.—(AP)—The end of a long parade of prosecution witnesses in the policy racket trial of James J. Hines was sighted today as District Attorney Thomas Dewey prepared to complete his testimony against the Tammany district leader.

The trial will resume tomorrow morning and in the next two or three days Dewey is expected to call his remaining major witnesses. None of them is as widely known as those Dewey put on the stand during the first three weeks of the trial.

The Labor Day week-end brought an extended recess. With the state's case nearing completion, plans of the defense took shape. It was generally agreed that the defense would seek a directed verdict of acquittal when the state rests and, failing in this, would summon Hines to deny prosecution contentions.

What It Means: That Business Upturn

By MORGAN M. BEATTY Washington—If your pocketbook is more interesting to you than wars and rumors of war, purges and rumors of purges—skip the front page and turn for a while to the financial section.

Pick out the headlines that tell the dramatic story of what is happening in the business world, for you would know what lies ahead for you and your family.

Or if you're a bug on politics, right now the financial pages will come closer than your congressman to telling you what happens next.

For business news mirrors the condition of the country, and its a political axiom that the fate of Presidents is decided by the condition of the country—and not by the principles they stand for.

Certainly it is true that Presidents in the past have not survived big depressions that begin while they're in office and last through election day.

JAPS CONTEND HANKOW DRIVE NEAR SUCCESS

Capture of Provisional Capital Seen by October 1

CLAIM MADE OF NEW VICTORIES

Estimated 10,000 Chinese Slain in Deadliest Fighting Since Fall of Shanghai

Shanghai, Sept. 5.—(AP)—Reports said to have originated in Japanese official circles said today the Japanese army high command expected to capture Hankow, the Chinese provincial capital, before October 1.

The army officials were reported to be convinced that Japanese forces advancing along both banks of the Yangtze river will be able to take Hankow within three weeks, even without support of the navy, which was not expected to keep pace with the advance.

The Japanese, reporting new victories along the Yangtze, estimated that 10,000 Chinese had been killed during a week of the deadliest fighting since the fall of Shanghai almost 10 months ago.

Seven squadrons of Japanese flew over the Lushan mountains south of Kiangsi all day yesterday, blasting Chinese defenses along the Nanchang railway with one of the greatest aerial bombardments of the Hankow offensive.

Three Japanese pursuit planes machine-gunned a tri-motored Junker transport of the German-Chinese operated Eurasia line, forcing it to land at Luchow in Kwangsi province with 10 bullet holes in its fuselage.

The attack followed a similar incident in which 14 persons lost their lives August 24 when a plane of the China National Aviation corporation, Chinese and American owned, was forced down near Canton.

First reports said the seven passengers aboard the Junker, including two German officials of the air line, and the German pilot, were uninjured.

GERMAN MOVE BRINGS ACTION

Announcement by Official of War Ministry Describes Call as Precautionary Measure; 60,000 German Troops Already Moved to Point Just Across Rhine

Paris, Sept. 5.—(AP)—An official of the war ministry announced today that France had called "certain reserves" to the colors as a "precautionary measure."

The call went out last night, the official said, after Germany had moved an estimated 60,000 troops into her new Siegfried line of fortifications, just across the Rhine from France's famed Maginot line.

"We can give no information concerning the number or location of these reserves," the official said. "We are watching the situation closely and will continue to do so."

He emphasized that there was no immediate cause for alarm on the part of the French public.

Havas, French news agency, said the reserves had been called to bolster fortification near the German frontier against "eventualities" which may result from Hitler's pronouncement at the Nazi Congress, opening today at Nuremberg.

"Because of the international situation and due to important reinforcements of men and material by Germany on our northeastern frontier, the government has found it necessary to take a certain number of security measures," said Havas.

"Thus, it was that to maintain at their complete strength the fortress (Maginot line) troop reserves were called to the colors. Soldiers on leave, officers and men, also receive orders to rejoin their garisons. It was a question of inevitable measures of precaution."

"These measures should not excite public opinion, calmness of which is one of the essential elements for the maintenance of peace"

MRS. J. L. CARPER, 1860-1938

On the afternoon of August 23rd, in our Greenville Church, was held the funeral of Mrs. John L. Carper, with W. A. Ryan officiating, assisted by C. C. Ware. She passed away August 20th at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. H. Bowling, at 4711 Eutaw Avenue, Nashville, Tennessee. For six years she had been an invalid. She was the granddaughter of Alfred Moyer, pioneer Disciple layman, who lived from 1793 to 1863, and who in 1850 was the first president of the Raleigh and Greenville Plank Road, which fact is commemorated in an impressive monument beside the Federal highway six miles east of Farmville. She was the daughter of Elbert A. and Mary Edwards Moyer. Her father was active in the early Christian Church in Greenville until his death in 1914, and was well known throughout the State for his effective service in our State Convention for many years. She was laid to rest in the Chery Hill cemetery beside her husband, who died some thirteen years ago.

Mrs. Carper is survived by her daughter, Mary Moyer Bowling, of Nashville, Tennessee, and a half-brother, Robert Moyer, and stepmother, Mrs. Lucy J. Moyer, who live in the delightful old Moyer home on Dickinson Avenue in Greenville, N. C. A beautiful personality has gone from us. Her spirit and character were so true and lovely as to attract and hold a legion of the best of friends. To her church she was ever faithful. Her steadfast consecration of talent to Christian ends was noticeable to a large circle of her friends, who appreciate and serve the church. Soloists say that she was a genius at the instrument as a real accompanist for the voice. In that she applied the gift of superb understanding. We are left to cherish the memory of this fine soul who passed our way.—(Reprinted from the North Carolina Christian.

Twelve thousand two hundred and thirty-seven books were borrowed from Sheppard Memorial Library during July and August, 1938. This is an increase of 2,219 over the figures for the same months of 1937. Staff members attribute this increase to summer clubs for children, reading garden activities, and the 200 volumes of new fiction for adults that were placed in circulation in June.

TOUR IN 1937 GOOD BUSINESS

Inspection Trip Turning Out Good Dividends

Reflector Bureau Raleigh, Sept. 5.—Workers in the Department of Conservation and Development have learned that in the resorts of the state the holdovers outside North Carolina come very largely from among the people who either visited North Carolina in the famous 1937 tour, or from people who were influenced by guests of the state.

Unusual Match On Tap Tonight

EDDIE WILLIAMS

When five husky beefs, generally known as wrestlers, mix at once in a "rassle-royal" at the city-county armory tonight, there'll be something doing.

A. B. Bracey and John Lautares, promoters of the regular Monday night matches, have been preparing for this event. They realized the wrestlers would be plenty tough so they made ropes of the ring doubly strong.

Now for something about the participants. There are only five of 'em. Eddie Williams, a 150-pounder, hauling from Springfield, Mo., is one of the entries. Eddie has made a hit with the local fans during previous engagements and has suffered only one defeat on the local mat.

Another participant in "rassle-royal" will be Al Perry, 189, of Pecos, Texas, which town used to be one of the toughest spots of the old Southwest.

That wasn't just a chance arrival. She is there for consultation purposes on a picture that is to portray the life story of Vernon and Irene Castle. Remember the Castles? They were the first great dancing favorites in America.

Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers are going to parallel their romance on the screen. Fred is pleased with this assignment. I don't blame him.

They won't have to change any of the facts to make it a good story. Only they will change them. They always do. In real life Vernon Castle became an aviator, and was killed. In real life Irene and Vernon Castle were married—and divorced. But they epitomized ballroom dancing and their name is a valentine in the hearts of all who saw them.

These photographs show another side to Henry Arm strong—the side you don't see when you're watching him fight. Broke and hungry several years ago, Henry started fighting really because his father and his family needed money.

BACK GRAY FOR STATE OFFICE

Regard YDC Job As Step To Lieutenant Governorship

Reflector Bureau Raleigh, Sept. 5.—Great activity among young Democrats, preliminary to their state convention next week in Durham, centers about the contest for the presidency which is being furiously sought by friends of Gordon Gray of Winston-Salem and George C. Hampton of Greensboro.

Quite apart from the municipal contest, which always is as savage as Durham versus Raleigh, is the 1940 bearing. This time North Carolina Democrats are going to get up more steam for second than for first place on the state ticket.

It has been so long since a governor became deceased in office that North Carolina has become habituated to nominating its lieutenant governor seriously. The state picks a good second fiddler. The national Republicans sought to shove Teddy Roosevelt with a vice presidential nomination and death came to the aid of the party.

So the Democrats are going to fortify themselves by getting them a good lieutenant governor. For young Mr. Gray it is set forth that minus his millions he would be somebody and that his two Winston-Salem papers would be good help in time of party trouble.

If Gordon Gray is nominated he probably will have no opponent for the lieutenant governorship and that makes the race very important. It is not said against Mr. Hampton that he desires to be lieutenant governor. It is not even charged that he is anti-Roosevelt, merely is the brother-in-law of Leroy Shuping, and that puts anybody in a race with Shuping backing him.

SOME GRAIN SEEDS DON'T SPOIL FOR YEARS

Fort Collins, Colo.—(AP)—Experiments at Colorado State College have disclosed certain seeds may be stored for years without harming their ability to germinate.

Wheat, oats and barley were stored for 10 years and no material loss in germination ability was noted. There was a sharp break between the tenth and twelfth years.

The germination of black amber sorghum was greater after 10 years than the year after harvest. Yellow dent corn can be stored safely for at least six years.

The results of the experiments were contained in an announcement to Colorado farmers with a suggestion that the best results are obtained when the seed is stored in an unheated, dry room. The seed also should be grown on clean ground.

ONLY FIVE CLUBS HAVE CHANCE IN AMERICAN

New York, Sept. 5.—(AP)—The American League pennant "race" which already had cut off two teams was narrowed down another man to five clubs today with official elimination of the Chicago White Sox.

The Yankees, by whipping Washington, gained their 87th victory of the season. The White Sox, although victorious over Detroit, have only 53 wins and can complete a total of only 86 wins altogether, even if they take all the 33 thirty-three games still remaining on their schedule.

Thus, since the St. Louis Browns and Philadelphia Athletics were mathematically eliminated a week ago, only four teams are left to chase the Yanks, with virtually no chance of catching them as they head for their third straight pennant.

Charles George, recently acquired by Brooklyn from the Southern Association, is the only Greek catcher in baseball.

How Europe Looks From This Side

An average American's view of worried Europe is depicted in this cartoon by H. E. Munhall, AP Feature Service artist.

GOOD JUDGMENT

The farmers of this county, we believe, showed good judgment in their meeting here Saturday afternoon when they voted, almost to a man, to support the tobacco control program again next year if a referendum is called. Past experience has taught us that an overproduction means financial loss to the growers and without assurance that next year's crop will be held within reasonable bounds, the tobacco buying companies, especially the independents, could not afford to pay high prices for this year's crop and hope to compete with the cheaper prices for the same grades next year where there would surely be an overproduction if there were no control program.

In giving public assurance of their continued support of the program we feel that the farmers have not only safeguarded their future but have prevented a further dropping off of prices on this year's crop now being marketed.

IT WILL BE NECESSARY TO VOTE

In view of the fact that the regular registration books are to be used for next Monday's municipal bond election instead of a special registration, as is usually the custom in bond elections, there seems to be some confusion on the part of the voters as to their method of voting. Under a special registration every person who registers and then does not vote is counted against the issue, while under the plan being used next Monday it will be necessary for each vote to be cast either for or against the issues to be counted.

We offer this explanation for the benefit of the voters of the city because, judging from a number of expressions we have heard there is a general belief that by not voting at all next Monday a person would be counted against the issues.

In next Monday's election each of the issues will be presented separately as follows: Water and Light plant improvements, New City Hall, New Fire Station, Improvement to fire alarm system, and a city yard to care for street department equipment. It may be that you favor all these issues, or it may be that you favor some of them and oppose others, or it may be that you oppose all the issues. In either event it is absolutely necessary that you personally cast your vote next Monday if you want your wishes to count in either the success or failure of the election. If you fail to vote in the election you just don't count one way or the other.

Election Laws Of State Same As Forty Years Ago

Demands For Reform In Past Bring Forth No Action

Reflector Bureau Raleigh, Sept. 5.—Counterfeit horror growing out of a belated discovery that North Carolina's election laws are among the few state institutions which have yielded little to marching time, is everywhere attended in this state by demands that the general assembly of 1939 do something revolutionary about these antiquated laws.

The late Dennis G. Brummitt, Attorney General from 1925 to 1935, often declared that North Carolina had the worst election laws in the country and he participated in some of the purges of 1932 and 1934 following the primaries. But beyond rhetorical activism Mr. Brummitt did not go. He was a member of the 1915, 1917 and 1919 General Assemblies, speaker of the house in 1919 and active in the enactment of the absentee ballot act of 1917. Likewise he was prominent in primary legislation of 1915, in the school legislation affecting to introduce democracy into school administration, and help to work out the legislation necessary for the enfranchisement of women.

But in all that long legislative service Mr. Brummitt did not feel moved to wipe off the books the state's antiquated election laws. Nor did Lieutenant Governor R. T. Fountain who offered himself in 1932 as one of the victims of a vicious system. Mr. Fountain had a less militant record than Attorney General Brummitt. The Rocky Mount politician, who was five straight terms in the House, voted against the "reform" measures when they came to the House and as speaker of the 1927 House and as Lieutenant Governor and president of the senate he was counted one of the best blockers of ballot legislation in the whole administrative outfit.

Even Major L. P. McLendon who represented C. B. Deane in the eighth district congressional election found as legislator much less than he discovered later as chairman of the state board of elections, and still later as Dean's lawyer. The state has endured them so long that they shock nobody. And for that reason there never has been any earnest effort to erase them from the statutes. Governor Max Gardner did have a prodigious fight to get the absentee ballot and he was the first governor who tried. Gardner failed to get all that he asked, but won most of his points.

The point is just this: The election laws have been just what they are for 40 years, and everybody knows it. They were written to make the state safe for the Democratic party and everybody knows that. They were constructed so that absolute discretion was vested in local election officials and everybody knows that. They were framed in such language as to give to the higher state officials no review, and everybody knows that.

Some of the papers having those convulsions of conscience now encourage the state in the making of such laws, and everybody knows that. The constitutional amendment of 1900 provided a way for white men to vote without being literate, and the accompanying election laws fixed it so that black men cannot vote if white men do not wish them to do so. And everybody knows that.

What not everybody does know is that when the election laws were written it was assumed that they never would be used upon white men. In a word, when Aycock, Simmons, Josephus Daniels, Judge Will Allen, and Robert B. Glenn were fixing up these laws for fair, it was assumed that never would they be used by Democrats against Democrats. But there is no machinery in them to prevent just such employment. Ambassador Daniels of course was never an elected member of the General Assembly, but it was a habit to call him an this paper "the third house, out of compliment to the way he legislated through his great journal."

The morality in these attacks on the laws lacks genuineness. And if they continue in 1939, there will be the grandest war in history, where in the oldtimers will seek to repel the centralizers who seek to send every issue for settlement to Raleigh where, think many people, too much power now resides.

WHAT IT MEANS

(Continued from Page One) of politics and business is playing out the third act, so far as the President is concerned, on the anniversary of the current depression. It was just a year ago, in September, that the bottom fell out of the New Deal's prosperity.

But for 12 weeks there have been multiplying signs of recovery—if one discounts the war scare that gave market prices a tumble. New Dealers will tell you that pump-priming is taking hold again. Anti-New Dealers will tell you that prosperity is not here yet, and nobody's sure it is coming. Pros say we're in for a long, steady pull upward for three or four years. Antis say if we do get prosperity, it will be in spite of the administration.

So you will have to decide for yourself.

More Building Permits

At the moment, business news is a shade on the optimistic side. For instance, all to the good is the news that John and Jane Citizens in 2,000 cities are trotting down to city clerks in increasing numbers for building permits. July permits soared about 80 per cent over June's which means they're nearly one and a half times as numerous as they were in August, 1937.

Not so good is the lag in cigaret sales. Americans puffed nearly 10 per cent fewer ready-made cigarettes in July. And, strangely enough, roll-your-own tobacco is selling like hot cakes. That looks as if somebody's cutting expenses. Take the question of a new car. It's the most important question on the business horizon, as well as in thousands of homes. For, as automobiles go, so goes the nation.

Even though sales have been nothing to write home about, the news is encouraging in the automobile business. Dealers have an average of four old-model cars each in their show rooms. That means new cars are somewhat scarce. Used cars are selling better, continuing a pickup that started in July.

To take your wife's breath away, the new 1939 streamliner will crash the spotlight in a few more weeks. More streamlining, yes, but larger wider bodies. The automobile trade says you can't resist them and their gadgets, such as more glass, less gear shifting, better brakes, and sleeker cushions. More important than beauty is the story that the auto makers are spending half a billion dollars for materials and tools to make these new cars. That's life blood to the body economy.

Farms And Jobs

Now take the news from the farms. Farmers are rolling up some of the largest surpluses we have ever known and nobody seems to want to take them off their hands. The cotton surplus is forecast above 12,000,000 bales. Excess wheat soon will cover close to the 500,000,000 bushel mark. The administration is spending three-quarters of a billion dollars to rescue the farmer from absolute collapse from his abundance, and still prices are far below what they should be. True, farmer income is going to be reasonably good, this year, what with government help, but still nothing to shout about.

But jobs jobs are the magic that will make any kind of political hoopay look like a million dollars, whether it be Hoover's two chickens in every pot, or Roosevelt's New Deal. What about jobs? Industry saw its way clear to take back 40,000 workers in July, and the trend is a bit on the optimistic side.

It all depends on whether the pump-priming money, or the spirit of the times, or the whim of the buying public can keep up the good work. The financial pages will tell you—day in and day out.

Chapter 25
Dissension

I HAD exactly one second, before the grip on my throat tightened, to fill my lungs with the clear, sweet air. Then down, down I went into solid green depths of water. I hadn't realized ever before in my life—I who had always been a crack under-water swimmer—how hard it would be to hold one's breath with a suffocating pressure on one's windpipe. It had all passed in a flash, and I was almost at the bottom before I realized what had happened. It was another minute before I could think what to do.

There were two men holding me, one by the throat and one by the ankles. Both were swimming with their legs only, for their arms were otherwise engaged. I kicked out desperately to free my ankles, but found them caught in an iron grip.

It was no time for ethics or clean fighting. My head was bursting and my chest cracked with the terrible strain. I brought up my arms, fumbled for the second face, which I could not see, and drove my thumbs into the eye-sockets, digging at the eyeballs.

I felt the man writhe, and a sudden wave of blind, crimson fury swept over me. If it was his eyes or my life, his eyes must go. I dug deeper and suddenly the grip on my throat slackened and dropped away. I saw a dim, black and white shape swerve upward. Then I doubled up sharply and caught at the neck of the merchant who held my legs. If the trick had answered so well with me, it would do equally well for him.

But he was no fighter when the odds were even. Almost before my fingers fastened on his wet throat, he loosed my ankles, wriggling to get away, and I let him go, slanting upwards like a rising trout. Then I drifted thankfully to the surface myself.

It was a queer scene that met my eyes as I looked towards the beach. The four other fellows were standing knee-deep in the water, but as I looked two of them ran farther out to give a hand to the first of my late opponents. The man I had just parted from was meanwhile swimming for his life to shore, while the remaining two had made a dash for the car, and even as I watched, I heard the roar of the starting engine. And all the time, half standing in his wheeled chair, old Mr. Venner was shrieking helpless objurgations, while Amédée hovered anxiously about him.

For an instant I wondered if he was upbraiding his employees for failing in their job, but all that mattered to me was that they had failed, and I took my way back to shore at a leisurely pace.

"Well," I said, "that was an exciting five minutes while it lasted." The old man stared up at me. His face was gray. "What happened?" he demanded.

"Nothing," I answered, "except that these gentlemen, for some reason, had a fancy for drowning me. One of them faked an attack of cramp, and when I went to help him, he got me by the throat, while another fellow gripped my ankles. If I hadn't been used to swimming under water, I'd be passing the time of day with my forefathers by now. But at least," I added with satisfaction, "I gave him a couple of sore eyes to remember me by."

"I Won't Have It!"

"IT'S an outrage!" he said, very low, his old voice shaking. "Unthinkable—unthinkable! I won't have it—I won't have it!" He caught suddenly at his side, and the gray tinge in his cheeks deepened. "Amédée," he said abruptly, "take me back to the house at once. I am ill. And you, sir—you must come with me. It is not safe for you to remain here alone."

It was a queer thought that I should be safer in the company of Venner the banker, but queerer still was the fact that I believed him, and without a word I fell into step beside the wheel-chair.

The sight of the housekeeper standing rigidly under the pillared portico, watching our advance across the terrace, brought me back to grim reality with a jerk.

Whether or not she was surprised to see me returning safe and whole I couldn't tell, for her round pink face was as blank as a stone image; but she came forward swiftly and laid a hand on the old man's shoulder.

"You are not well, Mr. Venner," she said quickly. "Amédée, take the patron straight to his room; I will come at once." Then she turned to me. "I hope you enjoyed your bath?"

"I have never had one like it," I answered simply, and when she making tracks for my room when she struck me with a gesture

"One moment, Mr. Lumsden. I am sorry to trouble you, but the key?"

"Of course!" I said. "The key—why, yes, certainly! I'll bring it down to you on my way out."

I made my way up the stairs, but just on the bend I halted, checked by the sound of angry voices.

"Henrietta!" came the old man's shrill falsetto. "It was an outrage, a dastardly outrage! I won't be argued with. You will telephone at once—tell him I must see him this morning or there will be trouble."

I went on my way, convinced that, however odd it seemed, the prospect of my sudden demise was not pleasing to Mr. Venner, and wondering not a little who it was that he was summoning so urgently to see him.

My bed was made and my room tidied for the day, but as I opened the bag to get out a clean shirt, I observed with interest that other hands than mine had been examining the contents.

For an instant I was at a loss to know what they had been looking for; then suddenly I remembered the key and chuckled to myself, reflecting that the housekeeper was taking no chances of my doing any unauthorized night rambling. I opened my door cautiously. The passage was deserted; there was no sound from the rooms below, and in a couple of seconds I had raised the tile, satisfied myself that the cause of all the trouble was securely in its hiding-place, and replaced the covering; then I strolled downstairs again.

"The Conscience"

THERE was a small door to the left of the counter, and as I passed it, I heard a female voice raised high in irritation. I paused for a moment, and the voice of Miss Henrietta Adams sounded clearly in my ears.

"Is that the Cap d'Antibes?" she was saying. "I've been trying to get you for five minutes. I must speak at once to Baron Stahl."

I rapped on the door and opened it without waiting for permission, inserting my head through the opening to see a small, bare room and the housekeeper sitting at a littered desk, her hand on the telephone.

"Mr. Lumsden!" she said sharply. "Do you want something?"

"Only my key," I retorted mildly. "It's nowhere in my room, and I thought perhaps the servants might have come across it when they were tidying up."

She glared at me. "It is not likely, but I will ask them," she said acidly.

"And anyway," I added, comfortably, "if it's lost, it'll probably turn up somewhere when you least expect it." With that I left her.

Stahl was coming, urgently summoned by Venner, and that summons had its origin in the recent attempt on my life. It was vitally necessary that I should hear what passed at the interview.

I went up to my room, closed the shutters, and sat down, my elbows on the window-ledge, to watch the front gate. Finally, a big gray sports car pulled up in the lane outside, and a small figure in canary-colored trousers strutted importantly towards the house.

So far I had had no opportunity to explore the upper story of the house, but I had a pretty good idea of how the land lay, and now, as stealthily as a mousing cat, I crept along the wide passage and hallooed outside the door that I knew must be Venner's. There was never a sound. I took hold of the handle and felt the door swing gently open.

I could hear now a faint murmur of voices coming from the door on my left, but when I tiptoed past him and set my ear to the crack, the words were still indistinguishable.

I stared around me, completely at a loss. Before me stretched the corridor, cool, empty, and singularly unhelpful, but at the end facing me, I saw another door. It stood half open, and when I peered round it I found that I was at the head of a back stairway, with another door on my right opening into a service pantry from me.

There was a window here, and when I cautiously thrust my head through it, I could have whooped for joy. Clear and brittle on the sparkling air came the voice of Baron Stahl, not 'we vards away from me.

"You will not have this young man killed?" he demanded, on a rising note of indignation. "Now that is very nice! And it was to tell me this that you bring me hastening from Antibes, on this morning of all others, when the old man and the girl have packed up and gone to Cannes, for no reason that I know, and in consequence all our plans, all our arrangements, must be remade? To tell me that you like the young man, that you do not wish him killed before your eyes! How many people, I ask you—crowned heads, statesmen, financiers—have died without a protest from you? And yet for this one big Englishman, a nobody, a nothing, you endanger our plans, you develop the conscience!"

"I answered simply, and when she making tracks for my room when she struck me with a gesture

Artist Zoe Mozart gets chummy; Artist Adolf Wolff beats breast beside gorilla he created.

Politician Meyers of Oregon totes goat. Politician O'Daniel of Texas totes barrel.

Singer Carni-Vale proves shower form; Heavyweight Max Baer proves he's a homebody.

The liquor taxes. Sales taxes fell off more than $57,000, but there has been a declining sales tax all along, due to the changes in the law. Exempted articles have taken off much tax and further exemptions are suggested for the 1939 general assembly.

Faithful believers in the ABC plan of handling liquor believe that the glamour of drinking goes slowly and that in actuality people are consuming smaller amounts of the poison. But there has been an increase in bootlegging and there are evidences that the patriotism of the drinkers has slumped also. Many of the bootleggers are selling legally made liquor for the same money that the county stores demand.

Anyway, latest revenue statistics tend to show that there has been general improvement and almost any of the statesmen will be willing to see alcoholic beverages taxes shring if these is improvement in the general business of the state and the figures of Revenue Commissioner Maxwell for August tend to show that.

Before the constitution was adopted in 1789, each state had full control over its trade with all others, and some states levied tariff duties.

Hitler has the floor, gesturing as he speaks, while Henlein (left), leader of the Sudeten German party of Czechoslovakia, listens. Hitler's remarks are addressed to Joachim von Ribbentrop (extreme right), German foreign minister. Next to von Ribbentrop stands Otto Dietrich, Nazi press chief. Washington—The people of the United States owe billions of dollars on a debt that is going to be hard to pay. This is the debt of the federal government which, including contingent liabilities, by the end of this fiscal year will amount to a billion dollars or more for every state in the union. It is a debt that has got to be paid if the government is to survive.

Fiscal experts again are discussing increasing taxes. Various schemes of taxation have failed to produce sufficient revenue to finance existing spending programs. New and heavily increased taxation must be enacted to pay the stupendous cost of government and the interest on the greatest debt in our history.

The only alternative to increasing taxes at great rates is reducing the cost of government. But to date none of the administration leaders has mentioned reduction of governmental costs as a means toward the end of balancing the federal budget and meeting debt obligations.

Proper Reorganization
 It cannot be expected that reorganization of the federal government could be made to bring into balance excessive expenditures and insufficient revenue. But a very definite and tangible asset to federal taxpayers and prospective new taxpayers might be made the result of proper reorganization within the bounds of tried fundamental principles for economy and efficiency, for elimination of wastefulness and extravagance and duplication in governmental activity and expenditures, for abolition of useless and overlapping agencies and functions.

The current admission by our leaders that increased taxation is contemplated is sufficient reason for immediate reorganization for economy and efficiency, even if there were not others equally imperative and equally obvious to all who take the trouble to look about themselves.

The distressing thing about federal government reorganization is that it is not in progress at the moment—for economy and efficiency. It might easily have been if those who took the initiative in the reorganization proposals of last year had made economy and efficiency, beneficial to citizens and taxpayers, an objective of the program. But they did not.

Therefore, we who sought reorganization for the benefit of those who pay the bills as well as those who spend the money were forced to fight the proposals for economy and efficiency might have a chance to live and be eventually enacted.

The fight was successful and, although delayed, the advocates of reorganization with emphasis on economy and efficiency are looking forward to an opportunity to support a reorganization program which has for its purpose a fearless and thoroughgoing reorganization of the federal government that will reduce the number of agencies now nearly twice as numerous as they were five years ago without impairing necessary functions and objectives; that would apply the brakes to the record breaking debt; that would deter the upward trend of taxes; that would expedite and simplify dealing with government agencies; that would strengthen independent accounting and auditing of government fiscal affairs; that would preserve the independence of the three branches of the government; that would facilitate relief for those who need it.

The constructive approach to government reorganization is toward the dual objective of economy and efficiency. The sum of these is simplification.

Such a reorganization program with the definite objectives of economy, efficiency and simplification I believe would be quickly enacted, and this much needed legislation no longer delayed.

Tax Shows Slump In Use Of Intoxicating Drinks

Raleigh, Sept. 2.—North Carolina lost $5,020.00 in beverage tax in August, using the same month for comparison in 1937, an insignificant slump, to be sure, but in line with the lessening business in liquor generally reported.

There are more stores operating than there were in August, 1937, it is true, but apparently there are fewer devotees of booze in dog days. In very few counties have there been gains. And Wake county has taken for August the supremacy in the state from Durham.

Whether these diminishing returns have had anything to do with the ABC counties which now are discussing advertising, it may not now be said, since the slump hasn't been abnormal. The state got $121,329.07 for its share of the liquor taxes, and the same month in 1937 produced $126,329.07 for its share of

Women In The News

By The AP Feature Service

YOU'VE made a quick trip around the world when you've looked at these four ladies from the week's news:

SOUTH AFRICAN NEWLYWED
Mrs. Max Joffe, of Johannesburg, Union of South Africa, sailed with her husband to Poughkeepsie, N. Y. It was a combination trip; they were delegates to the second World Youth Congress, the voyage was their honeymoon.

CHINESE HEROINE
Yang Hui-Min, 21, who won fame last November by carrying a Chinese flag to the "Doomed Battalion" in a warehouse at Chapei, was another delegate to the Poughkeepsie youth congress.

RUSSIAN MARINER
Anna Shchetina, 28, the first Soviet Russian woman to be licensed as a sea captain, has received the Order of the Red Banner of Labor. Between watches on the bridge of her ship, plying between Kamchatka and Vladivostok, she directed amateur theatricals and lectured on science and history for passengers and crew. Now she's director of Vladivostok's fishing port.

Hollywood Sights And Sounds

By Robbie Coons

Hollywood—Since John (Jules) Garfield is one of the few real star "finds" of the year, a few further observations than those I made in a recent column should not be amiss: His second picture (after "Four Daughters" in which he is successfully introduced) is "Blackwell's Island." He took the role of the crusading reporter because he liked the script—but in production the role became something else again. It is not the type he means when he speaks of his determination to do only "important" pictures.

In those "important" pictures he says he will be content to play any role no matter how unimportant—as long as it gives him a chance to act.

Despite his youth—he's 26 now—he was one of the most important factors in holding together New York's Group Theater where the something-to-say plays of Clifford Odets, among others, were produced. Call him a "Red" even in jest and he'll counter with "No, a Liberal."

One of the things he plans to do with his movie money—which is less than it could be because he demanded the right to go back to the stage when he pleases—is to produce "good plays I have faith in when no one else has."

Sad About Name
He says he is a little sad at losing his name of Jules in the movies. He wouldn't accept the first explanation the name-changers made. They said Jules might sound too "French-foo foreign." He said, "Come clean—it's because it sounds Semitic, isn't it?"

Markets Closed

OFFICER KILLS COUNTY NEGRO

tin went to a Negro cafe to answer complaints of Farmville citizens about a nickelodeon's being played after 11 o'clock and disturbing the peace. After the officers went to the cafe, the Negroes ceased their dancing and merry-making. Hopkins resented leaving the cafe, struck at the officer with his fist, missed, and dashed from the eating establishment.

Lucas and Martin struggled with the Negro at least ten minutes on the outside of the cafe. Sensing that his pistol was being removed from the holster, Lucas gripped the barrel. With his hands on the handle and finger on the trigger, the Negro then threatened the officer's life. Martin was told to open fire. When the Negro failed to release the pistol after the first shot had been fired, Martin's gun barked again. The Negro dropped to the ground and lived only three minutes.

"The Negro could have easily killed either of us," declared Martin, referring to Chief Lucas and himself.

'TALKING BOX' INSPIRES INDIANS TO CONDUCT A SIT-DOWN STRIKE

Juneau, Alaska—(AP)—Harper Reed, dominion Indian agent for northern British Columbia, is wondering whether installing a radio at the Telegraph Creek winter school for Indian women was such a good idea.

All went well, Reed reported, until a score of Indians pushed into Telegraph Creek two weeks before the end of the beaver trapping season, and relaxed.

Ordered back to their trap lines, the leaders replied, "We sit. We get what we want. Him city man all same—talking box say so."

Then Reed realized what had happened. The radio had given the Indians had informed them of sit-down strikes in metropolitan centers. There was a peaceful settlement when Reed explained government rations wouldn't be continued without work.
